transportation of its passengers. Reference was also made to the likelihood of plaintiff becoming a public charge by reason of the nature of her injuries. There is no question but that these remarks were highly improper, and should not have been made. While great latitude is allowed in appealing to the sympathies of the jury, attorneys should conduct themselves so as to prevent the exhibition of inordinate zeal which often leads to prejudicial error. Remarks addressed to a jury tending to excite their prejudice or passions, or to cause resentment, or unjustly enlist their sympathies in favor of their client or against the cause of his adversary, are always improper and should be avoided. The remarks in question were not assigned as misconduct at the time they were made, nor was the court requested to instruct the jury to disregard any of them. As the effect of misconduct can ordinarily be removed by an instruction to the jury to disregard it, it is generally essential, in order that such act be reviewed on appeal, that it shall first be called to the attention of the trial court at the time, to give the court an opportunity to so act in the premises, if possible, to correct the error and avoid a mistrial. Where the action of the court is not thus invoked, the alleged misconduct will not be considered on appeal, if an admonition to the jury would remove the effect. It is only the most extreme case where an instruction to the jury, if given, would not remove the effect of improper remarks. Tingley v. Times-Mirror Co., 151 Cal. 1, 23, 89 P. 1097; Olsen v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 20, 26, 204 P. 393; Scott v. Times-Mirror Co., 181 Cal. 345, 368, 184 P. 672, 12 A. L. R. 1007. A party should not be permitted to remain quiet and take the chance of a favorable verdict, and then, if the verdict is unfavorable, raise the objection on appeal. Moreover, appellant presented this matter to the trial court in support of its motion for a new trial. The motion was denied. A trial judge is in a better position than an appellate court to determine whether a verdict is probably due wholly or in part to misconduct of counsel, and its conclusion in the matter will not be disturbed unless, under all the circumstances, it is plainly wrong. Lafargue v. United Railroads, 183 Cal. 720, 192 P. 538.

[10] Finally, appellant assigns as error the rejection of certain evidence. Defendant sought by one of its witnesses to prove the manner in which the accident happened. The question was objected to as leading, and the objection to the same was properly sustained. However, the witness subsequently testified fully upon this subject. Complaint is also made of the ruling of the court sustaining an objection to a question directed to the engineer of the train as to whether he did all that he could to stop the train in order to avoid the accident. An objection to the question was sustained on the ground that it called for a conclusion of the witness. Whether properly sustained or not is of no consequence, as the witness thereafter fully testified upon this subject.

In conclusion, it may be said that after an examination of the entire cause we cannot say that the misconduct of plaintiff's counsel, above referred to, resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The unfortunate injury which plaintiff has suffered is of such a serious character that it demanded a substantial verdict where negligence on the part of defendant existed. The amount, though large, is not claimed by defendant to be excessive, and it does not indicate that it was obtained through the misconduct complained of.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CIANI et al.

Cr. 101.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

March 19, 1930.

1. Criminal law §511(2) — Testimony — Accomplice — Corroboration.

Corroboration of testimony of accomplice, however strong in other respects, is ineffectual, unless it points to connection of defendant with crime charged.

2. Criminal law §511(1) — Corroboration — Accomplice — Sufficiency of evidence.

Evidence held sufficient to corroborate testimony of accomplice implicating one of two defendants convicted of theft (Pen. Code, § 1111).

Pen. Code, § 1111, provides that conviction cannot be based on testimony of accomplice, unless such testimony be corroborated by other evidence tending to connect defendant with commission of offense.

3. Criminal law §351(3) — Flight — Consciousness of guilt.

Flight of defendant is admissible in evidence as fact showing consciousness of guilt.

4. Criminal law §324 — Two crimes — Presumption — Flight.

That defendant, when arrested, was charged with two distinct crimes, diminished force of adverse presumption raised by his subsequent flight.

5. Criminal law ⚖️511(1) — Sufficiency of evidence — Accomplice — Corroboration.

Evidence held insufficient to corroborate testimony of accomplice tending to implicate one of two defendants convicted of theft (Pen. Code, § 1111).

6. Larceny ⚖️23 — Degree — Value — Method of computation.

Value of stolen property should be fixed at time and place taken, or, if there be no market value there, at place similarly located.

7. Larceny ⚖️30(1) — Information — Describing property.

Information charging grand theft in taking "110 sweat boxes of raisins, of a value in excess of $200," charged theft only of raisins, not of boxes.

It appeared that sweat boxes are used for purpose of curing the raisins, and that, when purchaser buys quantity of raisins in sweat boxes, it is not intended that he shall receive the boxes.

8. Criminal law ⚖️1184 — Grand theft — Reviewing court — Reduction of offense.

Where prosecution failed to prove charge of grand theft, but did prove petty theft, Court of Appeal could obviate retrial by reducing degree of offense to petty theft.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Tony Ciani and Tony Porcelli were convicted of grand theft, and they appeal.

Reversed in part, with directions to grant new trial to defendant first named, and modified in part, and remanded, with directions, as to other defendant.

B. W. Gearhart and Lindsay & Gearhart, all of Fresno, for appellant Ciani.

Thomas F. Lopez, of Fresno, for appellant Porcelli.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MARKS, Acting P. J.

By an information filed in the superior court of Fresno county appellants were charged with the crime of grand theft. It is alleged that they "unlawfully took the property of the Bond Investment Company, a corporation, consisting of 110 sweat boxes of raisins, of a value in excess of $200.00, in lawful money of the United States." They were tried upon their pleas of not guilty, and the jury found both guilty as charged. Their motion for a new trial was denied, and they were sentenced to confinement in the state penitentiary for the term prescribed by law.

One Mike Devincentis was charged in a separate information with the same crime. He entered a plea of guilty, and was granted probation. He testified as a witness for the people against appellants, and furnished the most serious evidence against them.

The record before us shows that Porcelli owned a Dodge truck which was equipped with six wheels, two in front and four in the rear. These wheels carried the following makes of tires: Lee tires on the right front and both right rear wheels; a Goodrich Silvertown heavy duty cord on the left front wheel; a Sampson on the inside left rear wheel and a Goodrich Silvertown cord on the outside left rear wheel. These tires were of the type known as non-skid or all-weather, with ribbing and indentations that left markings in their tracks peculiar to each respective kind of tire.

The Bond Investment Company owned a number of vineyards in the general vicinity of Fresno. One of them, called the Stellianos ranch, was located near Reedly, about twenty-eight miles from Fresno. On January 19, 1929, there were one hundred thirty-four sweat boxes filled with substandard Thompson seedless raisins, stacked near the driveway into the ranch. On January 21, 1929, one hundred ten of the boxes with their contents had been stolen. It had rained during the week ending January 19, and in the wet dirt of the driveway on the Stellianos ranch on the morning of January 21 were tracks of truck tires that exactly corresponded to the tires on Porcelli's truck. These tracks were traced along the public roads for about eight miles from the ranch towards Fresno. The stolen sweat boxes had the name of the Bond Investment Company painted upon them. The company owned several thousand similar boxes which were used in connection with its operations in its various vineyards.

Mike Devincentis was arrested and confessed, implicating Porcelli and Ciani, who were also arrested. According to Devincentis, he and Ciani were together at the pool room in Fresno on the evening of either Saturday, January 19, 1929, or the next day, Sunday. At about 8 o'clock they were approached by Porcelli, who requested them to go with him into the country to get some raisins, he promising to pay Devincentis ten or fifteen dollars for the work. The three left Fresno in Porcelli's truck, and proceeded to the Stellianos ranch, and loaded the truck with fifty-five sweat boxes full of the raisins in question. They returned to Fresno at about midnight, and unloaded the raisins in the yard of the house in which Devincentis lived. A second trip to the ranch was made when fifty-five more of the sweat boxes full of raisins were loaded on the truck and again unloaded at Devincentis' home. Part of the raisins were stacked in Devincentis' garage and the balance in his yard. The three separated at about 4 in the morning; Porcelli taking his truck with him. Devinentis maintains that up to this point he had no idea the raisins were stolen. Continuing with the story, he testified that a day or two after the raisins were taken, Porcelli told him to be careful about the raisins, and then or later admitted that they were stolen. Devinentis secured some paint, and with Porcelli's help painted out the name of the Bond Investment Company on some of the boxes. The two of them removed the raisins from over fifty of the boxes and put them in other sweat boxes. They took the empty boxes of the Bond Investment Company and dumped them in an irrigation canal in or near Fresno. This completes the important parts of Devinentis' story. He did not charge Ciani with any knowledge that the raisins were stolen. His testimony was flatly denied by both appellants, who maintained that they had no part in the theft.

The three were arrested on or about February 2, 1929. An investigation was started at once to try and corroborate Devinentis' story. Sub-standard Thompson seedless raisins were found in sweat boxes in his garage and yard. Some of the sweat boxes had been newly painted, and upon washing the ends with gasoline the name of the Bond Investment Company appeared. The irrigating canal was followed, and forty-six sweat boxes with the name of the Bond Investment Company upon them were found some distance down it. Porcelli's truck was found with tires having markings that were identical with the markings of the truck tracks at the Stellianos ranch. One empty sweat box with the end painted over was found among other boxes on a trailer in the yard of Ciani's house.

The raisins were weighed and sold to a packing house in Fresno at a price of 1½ cents a pound, or the total sum of $216.67. The evidence of witnesses for the people was to the effect that this was the reasonable market price of the raisins in Fresno at the time of the theft. The district attorney attempted to introduce evidence of the reasonable value of the sweat boxes, but this was excluded by the trial court on the ground that the information charged the theft of the raisins, but not the boxes.

Two important questions are presented on this appeal, namely: First, was the testimony of Devinentis, an admitted accomplice, sufficiently corroborated to support the conviction of either or both of the appellants? and, second, does the evidence show that the stolen property was of the value of more than $200? We will take these questions up in the order in which we have stated them.

[1] Section 1111 of the Penal Code provides that the conviction of a defendant cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless such testimony be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. The rule by which the sufficiency of corroborating evidence is to be measured has been considered in many California cases. It is clearly stated in the case People v. Woodcock, 52 Cal. App. 412, 199 P. 565, 568, as follows:

"Where, as in this case, the prosecution relies upon the direct testimony of one witness and corroborating circumstances to prove the perjury, the character of corroboration necessary is like that in the case of an accomplice arising under section 1111, Penal Code. In other words, the corroborating circumstances used to support the testimony of a single witness must be more than evidence tending to prove that the testimony was given, and that it may or may not be false. The rule as to the character of corroborating circumstances necessary to support the testimony of an accomplice is well stated in 12 Cyc. at page 456, quoted with approval by the Supreme Court in People v. Robbins, 171 Cal. 466, 470, 154 P. 317, 319, as follows: 'It is necessary that the evidence corroborating an accomplice shall connect or tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. Corroborative evidence is insufficient where it merely casts a grave suspicion upon the accused. It must not only show the commission of the offense and the circumstances thereof, but must also implicate the accused in it. * * * But where the circumstances when proved, taken separately or collectively, are consistent with the innocence of the accused, there is no corroboration, and a verdict of conviction thereon will be set aside.' And in the same case the court said (171 Cal. 471, 154 P. 319): 'The corroborative evidence required to convict the defendant in addition to that of the accomplice is not sufficient if it merely tends to raise a suspicion of the guilt of the accused. * * * Mere suspicion, as has been shown, will not suffice as corroborative evidence; and where the evidence relied upon as corroborative of the accomplice is, as in the present case, only such as to raise a suspicion of the guilt of the defendant, the verdict must be set aside.' Then again (171 Cal. 476, 154 P. 321): 'The proofs of mere suspicious circumstances and of opportunity to commit a crime are never sufficient to justify a conviction upon the testimony of an accomplice. People v. Thompson, 50 Cal. 480; People v. Smith, 93 Cal. 218, 33 P. 58; People v. Koenig, 99 Cal. 574, 576, 34 P. 238; State v. Willis, 9 Iowa, 582; People v. Morton, 139 Cal. 725, 73 P. 609.'

"In People v. Morton, 139 Cal. 719 at page 724, 73 P. 609 at page 611, the Supreme Court quoted with approval from Welden v. State, 10 Tex. App. 400, as follows: 'We suggest this mode as a proper test: Eliminate from the case the evidence of the accomplice, and then examine the evidence of the other witness or witnesses with the view to ascertain if there be inculpatory evidence—evidence tending to connect the defendant with the offense. If there is, the accomplice is corroborated; if there is no inculpatory evidence, there is no corporation, though the accomplice may be corroborated in regard to any number of facts sworn to by him.' And again, on the same page, the court said: 'In New York, under the same code provision (Code Crim. Proc. § 399), it was said: "The corroboration, however strong in all other respects, must point to the connection of the defendant with the commission of the crime to be of any avail." People v. Ryland, 28 Hun. [N. Y.] 568, 570.'"

[2] When we apply this rule to the case against Tony Porcelli we find that there is sufficient evidence corroborating the testimony of Mike Devincentis to support the verdict of the jury against him.

[3-5] The case against Tony Ciani presents greater difficulties. There were two circumstances shown at the trial upon which the corroboration of Devincentis' testimony must stand or fall. More than a week after the raisins were stolen one of the sweat boxes with the name of the Bond Investment Company painted out was found with a number of other boxes on a trailer standing in the yard at Ciani's home. Of course, this is a circumstance that would tend to raise a suspicion of his connection with the theft. The weight of this circumstance is greatly lessened when we recall that over forty of these same boxes had been dumped in an irrigation canal by Porcelli and Devincentis and were washed down into the southwestern part of Fresno, where many of them were recovered after the arrest of the defendants. There is nothing in the record that would preclude the assumption that one of these boxes had been picked up by a person not connected with the case and taken to Ciani's house. The other circumstance relied upon by respondent to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice is the flight of Ciani. After he was released from jail, he left California, and was found some time later in the state of Massachusetts. Flight is a circumstance admitted in evidence as showing a consciousness of guilt on the part of a defendant. The record shows, however, that at the time of the arrest of Ciani he was charged with another crime not connected in any way with the theft of the raisins. With the two charges pending against him the flight might have been occasioned by a consciousness of guilt of either or both of the crimes charged against him. This circumstance reduces the weight of the presumption against Ciani caused by his flight. After a careful reading of the entire record we believe that the testimony of Mike Devincentis is not sufficiently corroborated to support the verdict of guilty against Tony Ciani.

[6] Whether or not the evidence shows the stolen property to have been of a value of more than $200 presents two questions that do not seem to have been decided in California. The first is presented by evidence which fixes the value of the raisins at the time of the theft in Fresno and not on the Stellanios ranch, where they were taken. The second question arises under the language of the information as to whether or not theft of the sweat boxes is charged so as to permit proof of their value as well as the value of the raisins.

It seems to be the established and well-recognized rule in a majority of the states whose decisions we have examined that, in cases involving the theft of personal property, the value at issue is the market value of the property at the time and place of the theft. Robinson v. State, 107 Neb. 591, 186 N. W. 977; People v. Cole, 54 Mich. 238, 19 N. W. 968; State v. Mall, 112 Kan. 63, 209 P. 820; State v. Maggard, 160 Mo. 469, 61 S. W. 184, 83 Am. St. Rep. 484; Filson v. Territory, 11 Okl. 351, 67 P. 473; Cunningham v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. R. 500, 236 S. W. 89; Keipp v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 417, 103 S. W. 392. In two of the states east of California proof of the market value of the stolen property at any place within the county where the crime was committed has been permitted. This rule loses its particular force here when we remember that Fresno county is almost as large as these states. We believe the better rule to be that in cases of theft the value of the property taken should be fixed at the time and place where the property was stolen, and, if there be no market value at such particular place, at such other place sufficiently near and in such a like situation that the evidence will afford a fair measure of value at the place of the theft. Hoffman v. State, 24 Okl. Cr. 236, 218 P. 176.

As we have seen, the evidence of the witnesses fixed the value of the raisins at packing houses in the city of Fresno, about twenty-eight miles from the place of the theft. One of the witnesses for respondent testified that the price would necessarily be less at the Stellanios ranch than in Fresno. Respondent therefore failed to prove that the value of the raisins stolen was over the sum of $200 at the time and place of the theft.

[7] The Attorney General attempts to meet this failure in the evidence to prove the value of the raisins at more than $200 at the time and place of the theft in a most ingenious manner. He argues that the language used in the information, "110 sweat boxes of raisins," is not descriptive of quantity or size of the various parcels of the stolen property, but instead is descriptive of the "things stolen, that is, of 110 objects of personal property, each consisting of a box and the raisins therein contained," and that therefore the value of the property stolen was not merely the value of the raisins, but also the value of the boxes. He illustrates his argument by saying that the terms "diamond ring," "can of tomatoes," "sack of flour," "bottle of vinegar," and "carton of cigarettes" each refer to but one object, namely, the container and its contents. We must agree with him as to these illustrations. On the other hand, if a vendor sells one hundred ten cars of iron, a barge of lumber, or a truck of raisins, no one would contend that the buyer would receive the cars, the barge, or the truck. We are immediately forced to the conclusion that in the illustrations used by the Attorney General he has selected finished products where, in the common and general usage of trade, the container and the contents form but a single article; the container and contents being bought and sold together. Thus by generally accepted definition the containers and their contents are included in the phrase. In the other illustrations used the words "cars," "barge," and "truck" are used as a measure of the quantity of their contents, and by equally common definition are not included with their contents as one article. We therefore believe that, where a finished product is prepared for sale, in and with its container, such as a "bottle of vinegar," the phrase refers to the container and its contents as one article, but, where an article of trade is put in a container as a means of transportation or a measure of quantity, such as a "car of iron," the phrase refers to the contents and does not include the container. It appears in the record and is of common knowledge in the raisin district that raisins are put in sweat boxes for the purpose of curing. It is a matter of general knowledge that, when a purchaser buys a quantity of raisins contained in sweat boxes, he receives the raisins and not the boxes under his contract. The sweat boxes are not sold with the raisins, unless there is a special contract including them. When the phrase "sweat box of raisins" is used, reference is made to the quantity of raisins and not to the container and its contents. We must therefore hold that, when the phrase "110 sweat boxes of raisins" was used in the information, it was used in the general and accepted sense employed in the raisin districts of the state, and referred to the raisins contained in the sweat boxes, and did not include the boxes; they being referred to in a descriptive sense as a measure of quantity only. The trial court properly refused to allow the respondent to introduce evidence as to the value of the sweat boxes.

Appellants complain of rulings of the trial court upon questions of admission and rejection of evidence. We can find no error in these rulings. They were eminently fair to appellants. There was no error committed in refusing to give instructions requested by appellants. The instructions given covered all phases of the case and correctly stated the law.

[8] There is no question that a theft of the raisins occurred and was proven. The conviction of Tony Porcelli of this theft is supported by the evidence. Respondent did not prove his guilt of grand theft, but did prove him guilty of petty theft. Under the authority of People v. Kelley (Cal. Sup.) 281 P. 609, we can reduce the degree of the offense to petty theft, and obviate a retrial of the case.

The judgment against Tony Ciani is reversed, with the direction to the trial court to grant his motion for new trial.

The judgment against Tony Porcelli is modified. The case against this defendant is remanded to the trial court, with directions to enter judgment against Tony Porcelli finding him guilty of petty theft, and to thereupon pronounce judgment upon him as prescribed by law.

PORTER et al. v. HILTON et al. ★
Civ. 244.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 26, 1930.

Rehearing Granted April 21, 1930.

1. Appeal and error §907(3) — Presumptions — Findings — Evidence — Appeal on judgment roll.

On appeal taken upon judgment roll alone, court must assume that all findings are sufficiently supported by evidence.

2. Brokers §106 — Agent — Unauthorized acts — Ratification.

Finding that owner of lots sold by broker acting without authority was not chargeable with broker's fraud by having received benefits of deal held justified.

In this case the owner's knowledge of fraud or circumstances indicating fraud was not shown, and the owner received only the consideration which he had all along demanded for his four lots.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Charles C. Haines, Judge.

Action by Roscoe S. Porter and others against Frank Hilton, C. E. Hamilton, copartners doing business under the firm name of Hilton & Hamilton, and others. From the judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

SLOANE, P. J.

This action was brought for the rescission of a contract of purchase of real estate on the ground of fraudulent representations inducing the purchase. On and prior to the 23d day of June, 1926, the defendant R. M. Fowlks was the owner of lots 15 and 16 in block 223 of Pacific Beach, in the city of San Diego, county of San Diego, state of California, and also of two similar adjacent lots, facing upon Garnet avenue in Pacific Beach. Prior to the date last mentioned, said Fowlks had given to one Earl Taylor, a licensed real estate broker of San Diego, California, a written exclusive right to sell all four lots as his agent, at a net price to the owner of $3,000 for each pair of lots, or $6,000 for the whole thereof.

On May 27, 1926, said Taylor executed a written agreement, by the terms of which he agreed to sell the four lots in question to the defendant C. E. Hamilton, of the real estate copartnership of Hilton & Hamilton, for $7,000. This agreement was in the form of an option, and recited that $100 had been paid for such option. Mr. Taylor did not notify the owner Fowlks at the time he executed the option to Hamilton, but did notify him of its execution some time prior to June 21, 1926. The option was executed by Taylor in form as though he were the owner of the property, but before the sale, which was afterwards made by Hamilton to the plaintiffs, was consummated, Hamilton was informed of the fact that R. M. Fowlks was the owner of the property in question. Prior to being so notified, he believed that Earl Taylor owned the property. While this condition existed, Hamilton approached Roscoe Porter and Johnston O. Miller, plaintiffs herein, soliciting the sale to them of the first described two lots, and as a result of the solicitations of Mr. Hamilton the purchase was consummated. Mr. Hamilton represented to the plaintiffs that the lots had been listed with him as a real estate broker by their owner, and that he was receiving the usual commission for consummating the sale thereof. He represented that the two lots in question were of a value in excess of $7,000, and that at such price they were the best buy on Garnet avenue, and that the owner could be induced to accept $7,000 for the two lots, but would not accept a less sum. Also Mr. Hamilton approached the two plaintiffs separately, representing to each plaintiff that the other plaintiff was familiar with the property, was satisfied with its value, and was ready to join in the purchase of the lots. In this manner, the two plaintiffs, each believing that the other had investigated the transaction, entered into the joint purchase of the property. Mr. Hamilton did not advise the plaintiffs of the fact that he had an interest in the transaction other than that of a broker interested in obtaining his commission, nor did he advise them of the manner in which the transaction was actually consummated with Mr. Fowlks.

The fact was that when Mr. Hamilton approached the plaintiffs he knew that the four lots could be purchased from the owner through Taylor, for $7,000, and he offered to sell to the plaintiffs the two lots first mentioned for $7,000, representing that he was acting as the agent of Fowlks. When the plaintiffs agreed to purchase the two lots they paid $500 down, giving Mr. Hamilton their check for that amount. Mr. Hamilton then gave them an unsigned form of receipt, being the ordinary form of receipt which real estate brokers give to purchasers upon consummating a sale. The receipt set forth the terms of the sale, and provided that the seller agreed to pay a regular commission. The receipt contained a blank for the approval of the purchaser, and Miller and Porter signed their approval upon it. Thereafter, Hamilton exhibited to Earl Taylor, the agent of Fowlks, a copy of this receipt, signed by Miller and Porter and setting forth the terms and conditions of the sale. It was upon this occasion that Mr. Taylor notified Hamilton of the identity of the owner of the property. Thereupon Mr. Hamilton stated to Miller and Porter that he was taking a trip to Redlands, the home of Mr. Fowlks, for the purpose of securing the consent of the latter to the transaction, and for the purpose of closing up the deal. As a matter of fact, Mr. Hamilton did not go to Redlands at all.

Up to this time the plaintiffs knew nothing of the connection of Mr. Taylor with the transaction, and knew nothing of the other two lots involved in the transaction, but supposed that at all times they were buying the two lots in question from Mr. Fowlks, through Hilton & Hamilton, as agents. The court finds that the representations of Mr. Hamilton concerning his trip to Redlands were also made with intent to deceive the plaintiffs. Thereafter Mr. Taylor went to Redlands to take up the matter of the sale with Mr. Fowlks, informing Mr. Fowlks that he had made an agreement to sell the four lots to Hamilton for $7,000, upon certain terms, and that Mr. Hamilton was selling two lots to Mr. Porter and Mr. Miller for the same total consideration of $7,000, and upon somewhat different terms of payment. The proposition which Taylor put up to Fowlks was that Fowlks accept the $500 which had been paid by the plaintiffs, and which had been delivered over to him by Hamilton; that he execute his deed for the two lots to Porter and Miller and accept their three trust deed notes for the aggregate of $6,500, and that as a part of the same transaction Mr. Fowlks, without further or other consideration, deed the other two lots direct to Hilton & Hamilton as their part of the transaction. Mr. Fowlks was unwilling to consummate the deal in this manner, as he wished his security for the $6,500 to be spread over the four lots, instead of having it against two lots only. He therefore proposed the alternative proposition that he execute his deed direct to Porter and Miller for two lots, accepting their payment of $500, and their three trust deed notes aggregating $6,500, secured by trust deed upon the two lots, and that he deed the other two lots direct to Hilton & Hamilton, they to execute to him a trust deed note for $2,750, secured by deed of trust upon the two lots deeded to them, and that he thereupon assign and deliver to them one of the notes for $2,750 executed by the plaintiffs. In this manner the same result would be obtained, viz.: Hilton & Hamilton would get two lots out of the deal without paying any consideration therefor, the entire consideration for the four lots being paid by Miller and Porter. If Miller and Porter paid up all of their notes, the note given by Hilton & Hamilton would be automatically extinguished. In the meantime, however, Mr. Fowlks would have security upon four lots instead of merely upon two.

In accordance with this suggestion, the transaction was carried out. The $500 paid by the plaintiffs was paid to Fowlks. He executed his deed to Miller and Porter for lots 15 and 16, and Mr. and Mrs. Miller and Mr. and Mrs. Porter executed their three notes aggregating $6,500, and their trust deed, to secure the same. They, of course, during all of this time, knew nothing of the other end of the transaction, whereby Hilton & Hamilton were getting the equivalent of two of the lots for nothing.

Mr. Taylor turned over to Mr. Hamilton the deed of Mr. Fowlks, which was by him in turn delivered to the plaintiffs upon the execution by them of the trust deed and the trust deed notes. The transaction having been completed and the three notes having been delivered to Fowlks, one of them was indorsed by him to Hilton & Hamilton and delivered to them, together with deed to Hilton & Hamilton for the second pair of lots. Whereupon they executed and delivered to Fowlks their trust deed note and trust deed for $2,750, and the court specifically found that the plaintiffs did not know of the conveyance of the other two lots to Hilton & Hamilton, nor of the receipt by them of one of said notes for $2,750, but believed that they were at all times purchasing direct from the original owner for a consideration of $7,000 for the two lots, and believed that Hilton & Hamilton were acting only as agents and receiving only the customary real estate agent's commission upon said deal.

The Union Trust Company acted as trustee in the transaction, the property in question being conveyed to it by trust deed. This company had no other nor further interest in the transaction, and of course had no part in the fraud which was found to have been perpetrated.

The plaintiffs brought action to rescind the transaction upon the ground that the sale to them was induced by the fraudulent representations of Hamilton. It was alleged by plaintiffs that Hamilton acted as agent for Fowlks in the transaction, and that Fowlks approved, ratified, and accepted the transaction made upon his behalf by the defendants Hilton & Hamilton. The defendants filed a joint answer, and the various defendants by way of answer denied the perpetration of any of the acts of fraud stated in the complaint, and denied that Hilton & Hamilton were acting as agents for Fowlks, claiming that the transaction was, in fact, a sale by Fowlks to Hamilton and a resale by him to the plaintiffs. The defendants also raised the defense of laches. The court found that on November 20, 1926, the plaintiffs paid the interest upon all three of the promissory notes.

Prior to that time plaintiffs had discovered that the property purchased by them was not worth $7,000, but had not discovered the conveyance of said other lots or the fact that Hilton & Hamilton held one of the trust deed notes. Shortly after making such payment of interest, the plaintiffs discovered that Hilton & Hamilton held such trust deed note for $2,750. Thereafter they discovered the facts of the transaction, but did not fully discover all of the facts until the 7th day of March, 1927. Three days later this action was filed.

It was claimed by plaintiffs that the lots purchased by them were not worth more than $3,500. Upon conflicting evidence, the court found the value of the lots to have been $5,000. It was admitted by the pleadings and found by the court that, prior to the commencement of the action, the plaintiffs took the necessary steps prerequisite to the commencement of an action for rescission.

It appears from the findings that a good deal of evidence was taken in the trial of the case to show the experience of the plaintiffs Porter and Miller in real estate conditions in Pacific Beach and that vicinity. That the plaintiff Porter was a licensed real estate agent of many years' experience, and that the plaintiff Miller was a banker of many years' experience, doing business in and about Pacific Beach and that portion of the city of San Diego. It was found by the court that Roscoe S. Porter had been engaged for a number of years in the real estate business in San Diego, and that Johnston O. Miller had been engaged for a number of years in the banking business in the same place, and both of them were generally familiar with the locality of Pacific Beach, but that neither of the plaintiffs had made specific investigation as to the precise values of property in that section, and neither was informed as to such values, but throughout the whole transaction they both relied upon the statements and representations of the defendant Hamilton. As to the question of laches and estoppel, the court specifically found that the plaintiffs were not guilty of laches, and were not estopped to bring the action.

Upon this state of facts, the court found that the sale to the plaintiffs had been induced by fraud, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to relief. It was found, however, that the defendant Fowls did not know of the false and fraudulent representations made by Hamilton, and that Hamilton was not and never had been acting for him as his agent in the transaction. The court therefore denied to plaintiffs the complete relief of rescission, but in lieu thereof gave plaintiffs a judgment for $2,000 against Hilton & Hamilton, the amount being the difference between the agreed consideration paid by plaintiffs for the property and the actual value thereof as found by the court, and granted such relief in lieu of the rescission.

Upon settlement of findings and rendition of judgment, plaintiffs filed their motion for another and different judgment on the findings, in accordance with the provisions of section 663 and 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure. This motion was predicated upon the express ground that the facts as found by the court affirmatively established that the defendant R. M. Fowls ratified and adopted the transaction negotiated by C. E. Hamilton, and thereby adopted the fraudulent acts perpetrated by Hamilton in such negotiations and was bound thereby, and that therefore plaintiffs were entitled to a rescission of the contract. This motion, together with the motion for new trial, which was predicated among other things upon the proposition that the decision was against law, was overruled. The plaintiffs thereupon filed this appeal.

[1, 2] This appeal was taken upon the judgment roll alone, none of the testimony appearing in the record. It must be assumed, therefore, that all of the findings are sufficiently supported by the evidence, the only question in controversy being as to whether or not, in the absence of any participation or knowledge on the part of the defendant Fowls of fraudulent representations by Hamilton, or any knowledge of the fact that Hamilton was holding himself out as Fowls' agent, he, as a matter of law, is responsible for any fraud committed in the transaction by virtue of the fact that he received the benefits of the deal.

Counsel for plaintiffs argue at some length and with much research of authorities that the acceptance of the benefits of a transaction is a sufficient ratification thereof to make Fowls, the owner of the property, responsible for the fraudulent action of his purported but unauthorized agent, relying upon the statement of the rule, among others, as laid down in Union Trust Co. v. Phillips, 7 S. D. 225, 63 N. W. 903:

"A corporation or an individual cannot adopt and claim the benefit of a contract made in its or his behalf by one assuming to act as agent, and at the same time repudiate the means or representations by which such contract was so procured.

"This rule controls, even though such agent, to the knowledge of him with whom he deals, has an interest in the making of the contract distinct and separate from that of his principal, unless there is collusion or fraudulent connivance between the agent and such other contracting party."

Appellants also rely upon the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Wilder v. Beede, 119 Cal. 646, 51 P. 1083, 1184, where the mother of the defendant, one Lucia S. Beede, owned a piano, and a party by the name of Hutchings negotiated a sale of the piano to the plaintiff, receiving from the plaintiff a promissory note made payable to the defendant, and causing the defendant to execute to the plaintiff a bill of sale for the piano. It was established that Hutchings, the self-constituted agent, obtained the note by false and fraudulent representations. The defendant was held liable for the fraud. In that case, as in the case at bar, counsel claim the defendant claimed that the property in question was sold to the self-constituted agent, and the transaction was a resale. In disposing of this contention, counsel quote from the decision as follows:

"But the particulars in proof did not sustain that view. The note showed on its face that it was a contract between plaintiff, as payor, and defendant, as payee. It was discounted, and the proceeds were divided between Hutchings and defendant, before the piano was taken from the latter's house. The bill of sale made on defendant's procurement ran to plaintiff, not Hutchings. Clearly, defendant acted on the assumption that through Hutchings the piano had been sold to plaintiff, and that she had agreed to pay him (defendant) the sum of $400 for the same. In that form the transaction had his approval."

Counsel further argue that "again, in the same case, it was claimed by the defendant, just as it was claimed in the case at bar, that the acceptance and retention of the benefits of the transaction involved no adoption of the fraud of the self-constituted agent because the vendee had no knowledge of the fraud." The Supreme Court similarly disposed of this contention in the following language:

"It is urged, however, that such a ratification of the supposed sale involved no adoption of the fraud of Hutchings, because defendant had not been informed thereof. But the defendant accepted the note from a self-constituted agent, knowing that it had been executed in advance of the delivery of the piano to plaintiff, and for a sum largely in excess of the value of the instrument. The circumstances made it his duty to inquire into the acts and representations by which such agent had procured the paper; he made no inquiry, and the jury might well find that he meant to take upon himself, without further information, the risk of any misconduct of Hutchings, and to adopt all his acts."

It may be said in this connection that it does not appear from the findings that Fowlks had any knowledge, not only of any fraud in this transaction or of any circumstance to put him upon inquiry as to its regularity and fairness. That he only received in the transaction the consideration he had always demanded for his four lots in Pacific Beach, and we do not feel authorized in finding that the trial court was not in error in entirely absolving the defendant Fowlks from any liability to the plaintiffs, and in rejecting the conclusion of the court that plaintiffs have been amply compensated by a return to them of the difference between the sales price of $7,000 for the property and its actual value of $5,000. It is difficult in any event to understand how seasoned experienced business men as the plaintiffs were found to be, familiar with the property in this immediate neighborhood, could have been seriously misled as to the value by a salestalk of even the most plausible real estate brokers.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PANTAGES.
Cr. 1922.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 8, 1930.

1. Bail §47—District Court of Appeal had jurisdiction of motion for admission to bail pending appeal.

Motion for admission to bail pending appeal, where motion was based on allegations that prisoner's confinement in county jail had caused recurrence of form of heart disease, with imminent danger to his life, could be entertained by District Court of Appeal.

2. Bail §44—Application for bail pending appeal because confinement is injurious to health will not be granted unless dangerous consequences are so imminent as to require release.

Where application for admission to bail pending appeal is based on claims of serious impairment of defendant's health due to confinement in jail, court's discretion in liberating defendant on bail will not be exercised unless it appears there is such imminence of dangerous results to life or health as obviously to require his release.

3. Bail §49—In application for bail, testimony of seventeen physicians held not to show imminent danger to prisoner's life because of confinement in jail.

On application for bail pending appeal from felony conviction, evidence of seventeen physicians, not agreed on question whether continued detention of prisoner in county jail would be fatal, held to show he might be retained in custody without imminent danger to his health or life.

4. Criminal law §1148—Decision on applications for bail pending appeal because confinement is detrimental to health will not be interfered with in absence of manifest abuse.

Where applications for bail pending appeal are based on ground that continued detention in jail would be imminently dangerous to health or life of defendant, determination of trial court will not be disturbed or ignored except in an instance of manifest abuse.

Alexander Pantages was convicted of a felony and, pending an appeal, he applies for admission to bail.

CONREY, P. J.

In the superior court of Los Angeles county, appellant was convicted of a felony and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. His appeal from the judgment is now pending in this court.

Appellant has now filed an application for admission to bail herein. He states, among other things, that since the date of his conviction circumstances of an extraordinary character have occurred, in that his confinement and detention in the county jail has caused recurrence in an active form of a heart disease with which he had been theretofore afflicted; and that, at the time of filing his application (February 3, 1930), and for several weeks, there has been such imminence of fatal results to the life and health of appellant as to require his removal from the county jail; that in the latter part of December, 1929, and again in the latter part of January, 1930, appellant applied to the superior court for admission to bail, and that both of said applications were denied; that the denial of said applications in the superior court, under the circumstances fully set out in the affidavits, testimony, and proceedings before that court, was an abuse of the discretion lodged in said court; that appellant is in imminent danger of losing his life as a result of such confinement, and that a situation exists authorizing this court in the exercise of its original appellate jurisdiction to order the release of appellant upon bail pending appeal. The motion is based upon a certified copy of the proceedings before the superior court upon said two applications made to that court. The motion has been presented after notice duly given, and the record of the proceedings on said motions before the superior court constitutes the evidence presented here.

[1] The Attorney General and the district attorney of Los Angeles county appear for the people and resist the motion. They first object to the jurisdiction of this court to entertain such motion; although it is admitted that the same subject could be presented and determined in this court by writ of habeas corpus. We are inclined to the view that this objection is not well taken. People v. Cornell, 28 Cal. App. 654, 153 P. 720.

[2] Coming to the merits of the application, we find that the rule concerning admission to bail after conviction, and particularly where the application is based upon considerations of health of the defendant, has been announced several times by the Supreme Court and the Courts of Appeal in this state. Before it can be said that the discretion of the court should be exercised in favor of the liberation of the defendant, pending appeal, and where the application is based upon claims of serious impairment of health of the defendant, by reason of his confinement in jail, it must be made to appear that there is such imminence of dangerous results to the life or health of the defendant as to obviously require his release from the custody of the sheriff. Ex parte Turner, 112 Cal. 627, 45 P. 571; People v. Cornell, 28 Cal. App. 654, 153 P. 720; In re Albori (Cal. App.) 272 P. 321, 328; People v. Keyes (Cal. App.) 279 P. 833.

[3] The record before us contains the evidence of seventeen physicians who have observed the defendant and expressed opinions concerning his physical condition and the particular diseases with which it is said the defendant is afflicted. According to the testimony of some of these witnesses the defendant is suffering from certain forms of heart disease, hardening of the arteries, and other physical ailments of such serious nature that there is great danger to the defendant by reason of his detention in jail; for example, one of them states that it is his opinion that the patient cannot be properly treated for his heart condition in the county jail and that if this confinement continues a fatal result may ensue. On the other hand, some of these witnesses do not attach any such serious probable consequences to the continued confinement of the defendant in jail. For example, one of them says: "I believe the mental state is the governing thing there and if this man could be reassured as to the danger of impending death during these heart disturbances I cannot see why the confinement would then be so serious a matter. The worry over his misfortunes would exist in or out of confinement and could not be removed by anyone." He believes that rest and a better diet than is possible under jail conditions would be of advantage to the defendant. Another physician states: "Considered from a physical standpoint alone no disability was found to exist which would imminently be likely to cause death or serious impairment of health leading to death because of confinement." Another witness stated that he did not believe that further incarceration would impair the defendant's health in any way. Another witness states: "Upon my examination and the information given me by others I believe that further incarceration is not necessarily of immediate and permanent injury to Mr. Pantages. I personally feel that the care of these conditions given in one place is very much the same as good and perfect care given in another place. The condition has not been acute in coming on, and no one can say it will be acute in its termination. One might guess, but that is only a guess."

After much consideration of the facts presented concerning the physical condition of the defendant, and the several opinions of the physicians, as shown by their testimony, we have reached the conclusion that the defendant may be retained in custody without imminent danger to his health or life by reason of such confinement.

[4] Referring to the contention of appellant that the denial by the superior court of his applications for bail was an abuse of the discretion lodged in the trial court, it has been held many times that the determination of the trial court, in relation to applications of this character, should not be disturbed or ignored except in an instance of manifest abuse. People v. Cornell, 28 Cal. App. 654, 656, 153 P. 720. We have, however, based our conclusions upon the entire record, without regard to the fact that the applications made by defendant to the trial court were denied.

The motion of appellant for admission to bail, pending appeal, is denied.

Appeal and error ⇄2 — Jurisdiction — District Court of Appeal — Law changed — Pending appeals affected.

Change in law as to jurisdiction of District Court of Appeal affected pending appeals, there being no reservation as to pending cases (Deering's Gen. Laws, Consol. Supp. 1925-27, Act 5238, § 29, as amended by St. 1929, p. 838, § 2; Const. art. 6, § 4b).

The change in law referred to was effected by Deering's Gen. Laws, Consol. Supp. 1925-27, Act 5238, § 29, as amended by St. 1929, p. 838, § 2, which enlarged the jurisdiction of the municipal courts and thereby changed the appellate jurisdiction of the District Court of Appeal, which, under Const. art. 6, § 4b, has jurisdiction of cases in which the superior court has original jurisdiction.

PER CURIAM.

We adhere to the position taken in the decision in above case filed February 6, 1930 (Cal. App.) 285 P. 332, to the effect that this court is without jurisdiction of the appeal. Appellant asks that we follow the recent case of Harris v. Moore (Cal. App.) 283 P. 76. In said Harris v. Moore reference is made to Cassard v. Tracy, 52 La. Ann. 835, 27 So. 368, 49 L. R. A. 272, but even in said Cassard v. Tracy the court said (52 La. Ann. 835, 27 So. 368, 375, 49 L. R. A. at pages 279, 280): "A reconsideration of these cases has led to a conclusion at variance with that announced in the former opinion of the court," and said court then proceeded to determine that legislative enlargement of a remedy on appeal inured to the benefit of cases pending on appeal at the time the remedial amendment took effect. The court said further (52 La. Ann. 835, 27 So. 368, 377, 49 L. R. A. at page 280): "The rule that the terms of a statute or constitution are not to be interpreted as having a retrospective or retroactive operation, unless the language used plainly conveys that intention and is susceptible of no other interpretation, finds no application to remedial statutes or to the remedial provisions of organic laws. Remedial laws are an exception to the general rule, and may have retroactive or retrospective force." (Many citations stated.)

In the case of Federal Land Bank of Omaha v. United States National Bank, 13 F.(2d) 36 (C. C. A., Eighth Circuit), under date of May 25, 1926, there is a résumé of a line of cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States holding that a change or repeal of law as to jurisdiction of the court, in the absence of a saving clause, affects pending appeals, and that, if a law conferring jurisdiction is repealed without any reservation, as to pending cases, all such cases fall with the law. Assessors v. Osborne, 9 Wall. 567, 19 L. Ed. 748; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Grant, 98 U. S. 398, 401, 25 L. Ed. 231; Hallowell v. Commons, 239 U. S. 506, 36 S. Ct. 202, 60 L. Ed. 409; Western Union Teleg. Co. v. Louisville & Nashville

R. Co., 258 U. S. 13, 42 S. Ct. 258, 66 L. Ed. 437.

The case of Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Grant, supra, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1879, is still a leading authority, many times approved. In that case a judgment had been rendered by Supreme court of the District of Columbia for $2,250, and appeal perfected to the Supreme Court of the United States. The minimum amount in controversy for jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States at the time the appeal was perfected was $1,000. While the appeal was pending, Congress raised the said jurisdictional minimum to $2,500. The Supreme Court of the United States dismissed the appeal for lack of jurisdiction by reason of the amendment. That court said: "The act of 1879 is undoubtedly prospective in its operation. It does not vacate or annul what has been done under the old law. It destroys no vested rights. It does not set aside any judgment already rendered by this court under the jurisdiction conferred by the Revised Statutes when in force. But a party to a suit has no vested right to an appeal or a writ of error from one court to another. Such a privilege once granted may be taken away, and if taken away, pending proceedings in the appellate court stop just where the rescinding act finds them, unless special provision is made to the contrary. * * * The repeal of that law does not vacate or annul an appeal or a writ already taken or sued out, but it takes away our right to hear and determine the cause, if the matter in dispute is less than the present jurisdictional amount."

Reference is made to the case of Moss v. Smith, 171 Cal. 777, at pages 788 and 789, 155 P. 90, for approval of the principles of law expressed in People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 159 Cal. 65, 112 P. 866, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1148 (cited in our former opinion herein); McMinn v. Bliss, 31 Cal. 122; Flanigan v. Sierra County (Cal.) 196 U. S. 553, 25 S. Ct. 314, 49 L. Ed. 597, and other cases therein cited. Moss v. Smith, supra, was approved in Freeman v. Glenn County Telephone Co., 184 Cal. 508, 510, 194 P. 705.

"A repeal of a statute under which alone a right of action exists, operates as an extinguishment of actions pending when the repeal takes effect, unless there is a subsequent law which enables the court to try and determine them." McMinn v. Bliss, supra, approved in People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, supra, and Moss v. Smith, supra.

In Moye v. National Surety Co. (Cal.) 280 P. 982, 983, the Supreme Court of California said: "It is clear that, so far as the instant matter is concerned, as the constitutional amendment in question related to a change in remedy only, the point advanced by appellant is not well taken."

Upon our further consideration of the case, we deem it proper that each party should bear his own costs on appeal. The order of dismissal heretofore filed is now modified to the extent that each party bear his own costs on appeal.

Searches and seizures ☞7(22) — Examination

Order for examination of contents of safety deposit boxes without limitation to particular certificates which have been identified held unauthorized (Const. art. 1, § 19).

On hearing to show cause why defendant should not pay alimony pending appeal, it was shown that defendant and his partner in business had safety deposit boxes for purpose of safekeeping of documents. There was evidence tending to prove existence of certain certificates of stock, some of which were in defendant's name. Plaintiff desired to obtain inspection of all securities in safety deposit box, so that an appropriate order could be made on application for alimony. Defendant contended that the order directing him to open boxes violated constitutional provision against unreasonable seizures and searches, as stated in Const. art. 1, § 19.

Petition by Frank Gubin and others for a writ of prohibition to prevent Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, and E. V. Rosenkranz, Judge, from enforcing an order which required petitioners to open boxes for inspection of their contents.

CONREY, P. J.

The petitioners have made application to this court for a writ of prohibition to prevent respondents from enforcing an order which requires the petitioners to open, for inspection of their contents, certain safety deposit boxes. The proceedings in question have occurred in an action wherein Rhonie Gubin seeks to obtain a divorce from the defendant Frank Gubin. Oscar Gubin and Bertha Gubin are codefendants of Frank Gubin in that action. Oscar is a brother of Frank, and Oscar's wife Bertha is a sister of the plaintiff Rhonie Gubin. It is alleged in the complaint that a large amount of community property of plaintiff and her husband is held in the names of Oscar and Bertha Gubin, who are made defendants in order to obtain a complete adjudication of the plaintiff's alleged rights in said community property.

In said divorce action an order was made on August 9, 1929, requiring defendant Frank Gubin to make certain payments as alimony and attorney fees. The order was made pursuant to a stipulation. Thereafter the defendants, pursuant to notice given, moved the court to vacate said order of August 9th on the ground that the stipulation had been obtained by misrepresentation, fraud, and deceit. The court having denied the motion, the defendants appealed to the Supreme Court and filed a stay bond in an amount fixed by the superior court. Thereafter the defendant Frank Gubin was ordered to appear and show cause why he should not be punished for contempt for not having paid the $250 per month alimony provided in the order of August 9th. In so far as the present proceeding is directed to the alleged right of respondents to enforce the order from which an appeal has been taken, we shall assume that no writ of prohibition is necessary, since we are informed that in connection with the pending appeal to the Supreme Court that court has under consideration an application for supersedeas, and in connection therewith has granted a temporary stay of all proceedings in the matter of enforcement of said order of August 9th.

But there is another proceeding not included in said appeal and not included in said order of the Supreme Court. On October 3d plaintiff obtained from respondent court an order upon the defendant Frank Gubin to appear and show cause why he should not pay attorney fees, court costs, and alimony pending appeal from order of August 9th. Upon the hearing of this matter and for the purpose of determining what would be a reasonable amount which the defendant Frank Gubin should be required to pay for the stated purpose, the court entered upon an investigation of the amount of property and income of said defendant Frank Gubin. This investigation is being made under an order of reference to a commissioner to take testimony and to make report thereon to the court. The witnesses before the referee are the defendant Oscar Gubin and other persons. Some evidence had been introduced tending to prove (although the fact is disputed) that the defendants Frank Gubin and Oscar Gubin are and for many years have been partners in the jewelry business, and have been interested together in numerous real estate transactions, and that as a result of those activities large profits have been made, and that a large amount of the profits belonging to Frank Gubin are concealed in the possession and under the name of Oscar Gubin. In the course of the examination of the witnesses it was shown that the defendants, or some of them, for the purpose of safekeeping of documents, have safety deposit boxes in banks in the city of Los Angeles. In order to proceed more satisfactorily with the examination of the witnesses, counsel for the plaintiff Rhonie Gubin demanded that said boxes be opened for their inspection. Defendants having refused their consent to such inspection the application was reported to the court for its action. Thereupon the court, by order of October 24, 1929, ordered the defendant Oscar Gubin to open these boxes in the presence of the court commissioner and counsel and the parties and that a list of the securities be taken that stand in the name of the parties defendant, except Bertha Gubin, wife of Oscar Gubin, it appearing that said Bertha Gubin is absent from the state and has not been served with process in said action. The court stated as follows: "The order will be made clear, that it will affect only the boxes that stand in the name of the defendant Frank Gubin, or the defendant Oscar Gubin, or the defendants Frank Gubin and Oscar Gubin jointly or severally, with this further qualification that if incidentally the wife of Oscar Gubin may also be named as one of the parties having the right of access to any or all of those boxes, that that shall not affect the order that I have made as to the remaining two brothers." It has been admitted by counsel for the respondent parties, during consideration in chambers of the present matter, that one of the three boxes to which the above court order applies is held in the name of Oscar Gubin, and that the other two boxes are held in the name of Frank Gubin and Oscar Gubin. The fourth box is excluded from the order because it is in the name of Rhonie Gubin, and she is not named as one of the parties having right of access to any of the other three boxes.

The superior court having made the order as above stated and having manifested its intention to enforce the same, the petitioners now present this application for a writ of prohibition. In that behalf petitioners claim said order violates constitutional rights of petitioners and is wholly without the jurisdiction of said court.

The particular right upon which they rely is described in the constitutional provision against unreasonable seizures and searches, as stated in section 19 of article I of the Constitution of California. Under the protection of that section it has been held that in no case should a person be forced to surrender his private books and papers to another who does not claim to hold or have any interest in them, except upon convincing proof that such books or papers contain evidence which materially affects the rights in litigation of the person demanding them. In Kullman, Salz & Co. v. Superior Court, 15 Cal. App. 276, 114 P. 589, 593, it appeared that there was pending in the superior court a divorce action of one Jean Kullman against her husband Jacob Kullman. In connection with her demand for an allowance for support and maintenance, the plaintiff made allegations similar to those made in the superior court as shown in the present proceeding, to the effect that certain of the defendants had entered into a combination and conspiracy for the purpose of concealing the property of the defendant husband, so as to prevent the plaintiff from obtaining the support and maintenance to which she was entitled. In connection with the action in the Kullman Case there was an application for alimony pendente lite, etc. In the hearing thereon the court made a certain order, of a general nature, for the production of books and records, without identification of any particular book or record properly subject to examination in connection with the issue then before the court for determination. The Court of Appeal held that the power of the court to compel the production of private books and papers can be exercised by the court only when the facts clearly and without question warrant it, and where those facts are produced through the instrumentality of competent evidence. The court said: "There are, in other words, two essential facts which must be made to appear by clear and unequivocal proof as a condition precedent to the right of a court to require a person to deliver up for examination by a court his private books and papers, viz.: (1) That such person has a book or paper or document containing evidence material to the issue before the court. (2) That the precise book or paper or document containing such evidence be designated or so described as that it may be identified."

In the case now pending in respondent court there is some evidence tending to prove the existence of certain certificates of stock, some of which stand in the name of Frank Gubin and which it is admitted are or may be in one of the safety deposit boxes. Apparently this is true of 225 shares of Standard Oil Company of Indiana, and an undetermined amount of shares of General Builders' Inc., a corporation. In accordance with the decision in the Kullman Case, supra, and other decisions of similar import, we think that it is within the power of respondent court to require the production for inspection of those definitely identified certificates. The court would also have power, for the purposes of access to those certificates, to suspend the operation of its injunction against opening those boxes, so that under proper safeguards the particular certificates in question might be examined, in order that the information thereby obtained could be used, with the other evidence received, for the purpose of determining the amount of assets of Frank Gubin, so that an appropriate order may be made on the particular application for alimony which is now before that court. But respondent court by its order is attempting to go further. It is proposed to subject to examination by the court's commissioner and by the plaintiff or her counsel all of the contents of the safety deposit boxes specified in the order, without limitation to the particular certificates which have been identified and described. As plainly stated by counsel for appellant, they have asked that the defendants Oscar and Frank Gubin be required "to open up the two joint boxes in the presence of the commissioner so that we may see what is in those boxes in the way of valuable papers." It was in conformity with this request that the court ordered that the boxes be opened in the presence of the court commissioner, counsel, and the parties, "and that a list of the securities be taken that stand in the name of the party defendant here, excepting the wife of Oscar Gubin."

We are of the opinion that in making said order the court has exceeded its jurisdiction.

Let the peremptory writ issue in terms conforming to the views herein expressed.

ALBERTONI v. ALBERTI. ★

Civ. 4023.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Rehearing Denied April 18, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 19, 1930.

1. Contracts ⇐167 — Applicable laws — Part of contract.

Applicable laws form part of contract as fully as if referred to in agreement.

2. Partnership ⇐84, 86 — Sharing profits and losses — Statute as part of contract.

Where parties did not agree on subject of their share in profits or losses, statute providing that in such cases shares of partners are equal became part of contract (Civ. Code, § 2403).

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by R. Albertoni against Mariana Alberti for an accounting. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

T. B. Scott, of Modesto, for appellant.
Hugo McKinley, of Modesto, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J.

The complaint and the answer both allege that in January, 1925, the parties entered into a partnership for the purpose of conducting a general dairying business on the defendant's land. The complaint alleges and the answer, by failing to deny, admits that on January 31, 1927, "by mutual consent of said partners the said partnership was terminated." Both parties prayed for an accounting. An accounting was had and the court found that the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant the sum of $1,303.34. Judgment was entered accordingly. The defendant has appealed from the judgment.

[1, 2] The agreement between the parties was oral. The defendant testified that by the terms thereof she was to receive one-half of the gross receipts from the business. The plaintiff and his wife both testified that the parties did not so agree, but that they agreed that the plaintiff and his family and the defendant, who is the plaintiff's mother-in-law, were all "to live together and work together, and whatever money came out of the place we were to take it and help pay off the mortgage, and at the time of her death, * * * she would leave the place to us." The defendant squarely contradicted such testimony. The court evidently did not believe that the terms of the contract were as claimed by either party, but found that "the net profits of said business were to be divided equally between the parties hereto." Neither party attempted to prove any agreement relating to the sharing of profits and losses except as stated. "All applicable laws in existence when an agreement is made necessarily enter into it and form a part of it as fully as if they were expressly referred to and incorporated in its terms." 6 Cal. Jur. 310. At the time the agreement was entered into section 2403 of the Civil Code read as follows: "In the absence of any agreement on the subject the shares of partners in the profit or loss of the business are equal, and the share of each in the partnership property is the value of his original contribution, increased or diminished by his share of profit or loss." In the absence of an agreement on the subject, this section became one of the terms of the contract between the parties, and the finding in question is in strict accordance therewith. It is not contended that there are any errors in the account between the parties as found by the court except as based on the defendant's theory that she is entitled to one-half the gross receipts.

The judgment is affirmed.

BROWN et al. v. MONTGOMERY WARD & CO., Inc., et al.

Civ. 6975.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 25, 1930.

1. Automobiles ☞193(8) — Course of employment — Traveling auditor — Negligence — Employer's liability.

Traveling auditor going to his home in his auto after making a tour of employer's stores held in "course of employment," and master was liable for his negligence.

A route was planned for traveling auditor and he had to visit certain stores and complete trip in certain time. Otherwise his hours and time were in his discretion.

He drove his own car and was allowed a certain amount per mile for its use. Sometimes he traveled during regular working hours, and sometimes outside of regular working hours. Returning home from the last store, he passed his headquarters, which was closed for the night, and continued on home, and it was on this part of the journey that his automobile struck deceased.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Action by Charles W. Brown and others against Montgomery Ward & Co., Incorporated, and another. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal.

STURTEVANT, J.

Mrs. M. A. Brown was struck by an automobile which was being driven by one of the employees of Montgomery Ward & Co. She died of the injuries sustained. Her heirs sued for damages. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, the defendants have appealed.

[1] The defendants claim that the evidence did not show that at the time of the accident the defendant Vinje, who was driving the automobile, was acting within the scope and course of his employment. Mr. Vinje is an accountant, he owns his automobile, and resides in Berkeley. At the time of the accident he was a traveling auditor for the defendant Montgomery Ward & Co. That company maintains a store in Oakland and a chain of stores located in different parts of the state. The head auditor is attached to the Oakland store. He has an assistant. Besides that assistant, the company has two or more traveling auditors. From time to time the head auditor and the traveling auditor, as the witnesses testified, "lay out a program of audits for a trip." That program includes certain designated stores and a certain designated period for the trip. Mr. Vinje was paid a certain sum per week, and he was allowed to travel in his own automobile and the company paid him nine cents per mile. That mileage was computed as follows: When he left his house the mileage was computed from the house to the first store, which was at Merced; thence to Tulare; thence to Hanford; thence to Salinas; and thence home. The work laid down in the program had to be done within the period therein stated; otherwise, Mr. Vinje commenced work, continued work, or stopped work at such time or times as he chose, worked or traveled on such hours as he chose, and was not under any order or orders in any respect. When auditing a store he usually worked during the working hours of that particular store, but sometimes took work to his hotel. When traveling he usually traveled during working hours, but sometimes started a trip earlier in the day or finished later in the day. As each store was audited a report was made out. One copy was mailed to the Chicago office and one to the Oakland office.

On Monday, about ten days prior to the accident, Mr. Vinje left his home to audit the stores located at Merced, Tulare, Hanford, and Salinas. He traveled in his automobile and carried with him a typewriter and some books of instruction which were the property of Montgomery Ward & Co. At about 3 o'clock on Friday, July 29, 1928, he had finished auditing the store at Salinas, which was the last store on his program, and had written out his reports. He put the typewriter, books of instruction, and Salinas reports in his automobile and started toward his home in Berkeley. As he traveled north he passed by the Oakland store, but did not stop. It was then 7:45 p. m. and the store had closed at 5 p. m. He continued on his way to his home in Berkeley and returned to the store Monday morning. While traveling between the Oakland store and his home the accident happened.

Under the foregoing facts it is patent that Mr. Vinje was employed by Montgomery Ward & Co.; that he was so employed on a fixed wage or salary; that it was his duty to go to the places designated on his program and at each place to audit the books of his employer's store located at that place; that it was his duty to audit such books according to certain written instructions contained in books of instruction which were delivered to him; that while hours of work and travel were not prescribed in detail a general limit was placed on the time within which the program would be completed; and that when the program was completed it was the duty of the employee to return to the head office for further assignments. As the employee was not restricted from making some short days, neither was he restricted from working some long days. As the stores on his program were at a distance, necessarily he was compelled to go to each and finally return. Moreover, the facts show that his employer not only knew that he would travel by automobile, but his employer paid for its use nine cents a mile from the time the employee left his home until he returned to his home. That at a certain store the employee might have short hours or long hours and that in traveling he might travel either late or early was in the interest of the employer rather than against it. Moreover, such facts were expressly contemplated by the terms of the contract.

The defendants do not claim Mr. Vinje was an independent contractor. Their claim is merely that at the time and place of the accident he was not acting within the scope and course of his employment. However, we think the foregoing facts show that he was. If his employer would contend otherwise, then it should specify the hours of labor and the hours of travel or the employer should keep the store open to receive belated employees. If the accident had happened between Salinas and Oakland, the defendants would not even make the contention which they now make. After Mr. Vinje arrived at the Oakland store and found it closed, under the terms of his contract of employment, he was entitled to go to his home. Whether his program ended on arriving at his home or ended when, on Monday morning, he arrived at the office need not be determined. It had not ended when the accident occurred.

[2] The defendants claim the decedent was guilty of contributory negligence. The decedent left the northeast corner of Thirty-Fifth street and started to walk diagonally across Telegraph avenue to a mail box. She was seen to leave the sidewalk, but no witness testified that she did or did not look for passing vehicles. As she walked up the street she was, in the beginning, walking diagonally across the right-hand zone of the street. The defendants argue that as she could not see vehicles traveling on the right-hand side of the street without looking over her shoulder, she was guilty of contributory negligence. But there is no evidence she did not look over her shoulder. The point is without merit.

[3] In reply to a question that was not objected to, Mrs. Wasson made quite a long statement. Some of the substance was pertain-nent to the issue. Some was not. Defendants' counsel made a motion: "I ask that be stricken out as not responsive, and irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial." The motion was too broad. The court did not err in denying it.

The surviving husband gave testimony regarding the extent to which the deceased managed the family purse, the length of time, and the success of her management. Included in the statement was some matter regarding her contributions from moneys which she had been given by a brother. The defendants made a motion to strike. It was denied. The same comment as above is pertinent to the form of the motion.

[4] The witness Hemphill testified as to some brake tests which he had made. No objection was made as to any question. After he had finished and just before he was leaving the stand, the defendants made a motion to strike out. The attack came too late.

Finally it is claimed the trial court erred in giving an instruction on the last clear chance doctrine. It will be enough to say that the instruction complained of is not addressed to the subject of the last clear chance.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GALLOWAY.

Cr. 11.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

March 10, 1930.

1. Homicide $\S$ 166(1)—Refusing evidence of motive for assaults with deadly weapon with intent held not error where perpetration of acts was shown.

In prosecution for assaults with deadly weapons with intent to commit murder, refusing evidence to show motive for assault held not error, where perpetration of acts charged was brought home to defendant by abundant evidence making unimportant and immaterial motive for acts.

2. Homicide $\S$ 339—Defendant, prosecuted for assault to murder, offering no evidence thereon cannot complain of exclusion of evidence concerning intent, where not found guilty of specific intent to murder.

Exclusion of evidence concerning intent cannot be complained of by defendant, in prosecution for assault with deadly weapon to murder, where he offered no evidence thereon, and jury failed to find defendant guilty of specific intent to murder.

3. Homicide $\S$ 145—Law presumes unlawful intent where assaults with deadly weapons were abundantly established (Pen. Code, $\S$ 20; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, subd. 2).

Where assaults with deadly weapons with intent to commit murder were abundantly established, law presumes in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, subd. 2, an unlawful intent sufficient to comply with requirement of Pen. Code, $\S$ 20.

4. Assault and battery $\S$ 87—Past relations cannot be gone into to show which party to assault was in right, though motive is material.

Even when motive is material, past relations of parties may not be gone into with purpose of showing which party to assault was in right.

5. Homicide $\S$ 95—That prosecuting witness kept company with defendant's wife did not constitute provocation for assault to kill.

Circumstance that prosecuting witness, in prosecution for assault with deadly weapon to commit murder, kept company with wife of defendant did not constitute legal provocation for assaults and hence exclusion of evidence thereon was not error.

6. Homicide $\S$ 84—Whether there was heat of passion was immaterial where defendant pleaded not guilty of assault to murder.

Where defendant, prosecuted for assault with deadly weapons to commit murder, was being tried under pleas of not guilty, whether or not there was heat of passion was immaterial.

7. Homicide $\S$ 94—While extenuating circumstances may be considered by judge in pronouncing sentence, defendant prosecuted for assault to murder could not take law into own hands.

Though any extenuating circumstances might properly be considered by judge in pronouncing sentence, individual, prosecuted for assault with deadly weapons to commit murder, could not properly take law into own hands and commit assaults.

8. Witnesses $\S$ 388(2)—Refusing impeachment of prosecuting witness by examination on immaterial matter whether he knew defendant might assault him held not error, where no foundation was laid (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 2052).

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapons with intent to murder, refusing to permit impeachment of prosecuting witness by examination on immaterial matter, as to whether prosecuting witness knew defendant was likely to assault him, and as to whether he had endeavored to find out what activities of defendant were, held not error, where no foundation was laid or attempted to be laid in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 2052.

9. Criminal law $\S$ 1170½(1)—Error in refusing impeachment of own witness held of no avail to defendant, where matter was immaterial and no foundation was laid (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 2049, 2052).

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapons with intent to murder, error in refusing to allow impeachment of own witness of defendant examining prosecuting witness, as provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 2049, by interrogating him at to whether he had heard that defendant was likely to assault him, on ground that defendant could not impeach own witness held of no avail to defendant, for reason that it was attempt to impeach witness on immaterial matter, and because no foundation was laid or attempted to be laid in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 2052.

10. Criminal law ☞829(18)—Refusing instruction on reasonable doubt held not error where court read statute thereon (Pen. Code, § 1096).

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon to commit murder, refusing instruction on reasonable doubt held not error, where court read to jury Pen. Code § 1096, relating thereto, in view of section 1096a providing that where that is done, no further instruction upon subject is necessary.

11. Homicide ☞309(6)—Refusing, in prosecution for assault to murder, instruction relating to manslaughter based on immaterial excluded matters held not error.

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon to commit murder, refusing instruction relating to manslaughter which was not applicable and which was based on immaterial matters which were properly excluded from evidence, held not error.

12. Homicide ☞269—Intention with which assaults were made held material fact for jury in prosecution for assault to murder.

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon to commit murder, intention with which assaults were committed was material fact to be determined by jury.

13. Assault and battery ☞96(1)—Refusing instruction on simple assault held not error where evidence showed assaults with deadly weapons (Pen. Code, § 1159).

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon with intent to murder, refusing instruction that jury might find defendant guilty of simple assault held not error, where evidence showed assaults were made with deadly weapons so that it would not warrant verdict of guilty of simple assault though Pen. Code § 1159 provides defendant may be found guilty of an offense, commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged.

14. Criminal law ☞1042—If sentences did not represent court's intention, matter should have been called to court's attention.

Matter should have been called to attention of trial court if it appeared, in prosecution for assaults with deadly weapons to commit murder, that sentences did not represent court's intention at time.

15. Criminal law ☞1144(17)—Sentences for assaults with deadly weapons must be presumed in accord with intention of court making no changes after being advised sentences must run consecutively and not concurrently.

Where court made no changes in sentences imposed for assaults with deadly weapons after it was called to court's attention by district attorney that law required that sentences run consecutively and not concurrently, it must be presumed that sentences were in accord with intention of court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. S. Clack, Judge.

James Galloway was convicted of two assaults each with a deadly weapon, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Millspaugh & Smith, of Lindsay, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Leroy McCormick, Dist. Atty., of Visalia, and W. G. Machetanz, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Exeter, for the People.

BARNARD, J.

This is an appeal from the judgments in two separate cases, which were consolidated and tried before the same jury. In each case the defendant was charged with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, and in each case he was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon.

In the first case, the defendant was charged with making an assault upon one Fred Raynor, the uncontradicted evidence showing that said defendant appeared at a fruit packing house in Lindsay, Cal., where the said Raynor was at work; that Raynor heard his name called and looking up observed the defendant within eight or ten feet of him, and with a .22-caliber revolver pointed at him; and that Raynor immediately dropped down behind a truck, just as the defendant fired at him. Raynor testifies that he did not know the defendant was looking for him, and knew of no reason why he should shoot at him. The evidence also shows that while the defendant was being held, awaiting the arrival of an officer, he said he "wanted to kill the son of a bitch." While he was being led away by the officer, he stated that he "wanted to go back and get the sucker."

The uncontradicted evidence in the other case shows that on the day following the preliminary examination in the first case, the prosecuting witness, Raynor, entered a clothing store in Exeter, Cal., for the purpose of making a purchase. While Raynor was following the clerk to the hat rack, he observed the defendant just inside the door, coming at him with a knife in his hand. Raynor ran around the hat rack and attempted to escape, but the defendant pursued him and caught him at the door. Raynor felt the knife in his back and fell to the floor. The defendant placed himself astride him and stabbed and cut him in twenty-eight separate places, five of which stab wounds penetrated the pleural cavity.

The first assignment of error is, that the court erred in ruling out all evidence offered to show the motive or to inquire into the matter of the motive for the alleged crimes. In the case of People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 48 P. 75, 81, the Supreme Court says: "In every criminal case proof of the moving cause is permissible, and oftentimes is valuable; but it is never essential. Where the perpetration of a crime has been brought home to a defendant, the motive for its commission becomes unimportant. Evidence of motive is sometimes of assistance in removing doubt, and completing proof which might otherwise be unsatisfactory; and that motive may either be shown by positive evidence, or gleaned from the facts and surroundings of the act. The motive then becomes a circumstance, but nothing more than a circumstance, to be considered by the jury; and its absence is equally a circumstance in favor of the accused, to be given such weight as it deems proper. But proof of motive is never indispensable to a conviction."

[1] In the present case, the perpetration of the acts charged were brought home to the defendant by abundant evidence, and the motive for the acts was therefore unimportant and immaterial.

[2] The second assignment of error is thus stated: "That the court erred in excluding all evidence concerning intent of the defendant, except such evidence as related only to the time of the alleged crimes." No evidence was offered by the defendant to show any such intent, and since the jury failed to find the defendant guilty of the specific intent to murder, the defendant may not complain, and is not prejudiced. What is here objected to is not the question of intent, but the court's ruling as to the showing of provocation.

The third assignment of error is "that the court erred in excluding evidence offered to show legal provocation, and that the acts of which defendant was accused, were done while he was laboring under a heat of passion, reasonably provoked in him by the acts of the prosecuting witness."

[3-7] These first three assignments of error all go to the refusal of the court to permit the defendant to show certain previous relations between the parties. In one question asked by defendant's counsel, on cross-examination, it was indicated that the defense intended to be shown, was that the prosecuting witness was keeping company with defendant's wife. In the absence of the jury, the court asked defendant's counsel to state the nature of their defense. This defense was thus stated: "The defense proposes to show that there was a provocation here that extended over a period of two or three years, a deliberate scheming attempt to break up a man's home and ruin his happiness, such a one as would practically dethrone any reasonable man's reason." While the argument is made that the matters sought to be introduced in evidence were admissible, as going to the intent and the motive, it is apparent that their admission was sought for the purpose of showing provocation. The unlawful act having been brought home to the defendant in both cases, the law presumes an unlawful intent sufficient to comply with the requirement of section 20 of the Penal Code. Section 1963, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc. Under such circumstances, as was pointed out in People v. Durrant, supra, the motive is unimportant and immaterial. Even when the motive is material, the past relations of the parties may not be gone into with the purpose of showing which party was in the right. People v. Yokum, 118 Cal. 437, 50 P. 686; People v. Colvin, 118 Cal. 349, 50 P. 539; People v. Conkling, 111 Cal. 616, 44 P. 314; People v. Thomson, 92 Cal. 506, 28 P. 589. The introduction of this evidence was sought, not to show motive as claimed, but to show what the defendant terms a "legal provocation." The circumstances here sought to be shown as a defense did not constitute a legal provocation. The law does not recognize the right of any person to avenge his wrongs by shooting and stabbing. In cases of homicide, by special statute, where the crime is committed under sufficient heat of passion, the offense is reduced from murder to manslaughter. It may also be conceded that under certain circumstances such evidence might, under a plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity," be admissible for the purpose of showing its effect upon the mind and reason of the defendant. There is, however, no legal provocation in the sense here contended for. The defendant was here being tried under pleas of "not guilty," and whether or not there was heat of passion, makes no difference. The admission of the evidence in question was properly refused by the trial court. While any extenuating circumstances might properly be considered by the judge in pronouncing sentence, an individual may not thus take the law into his own hands.

[8] The next assignment of error is, that the court erred in refusing to permit the impeachment of the prosecuting witness. Upon cross-examination the prosecuting witness was asked, "Haven't you, as a matter of fact, Mr. Raynor, heard from several sources that Mr. Galloway was likely to go after you because you were chasing around with his wife?" And also, "Had you ever busied yourself during that time to find out what Mr. Galloway's activities were?" The court sustained objections to both of these questions as being incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. Defendant says in his brief, that these questions had to do with inconsistent statements made by the prosecuting witness at the preliminary hearing, the subject-matter being the relations of the prosecuting witness with the wife of the defendant. This was plainly an attempt to impeach the witness on an immaterial matter. Not only that, but the record shows no foundation was laid, and no attempt was made to lay a foundation. The witness was neither asked whether he had at other times made statements inconsistent with his testimony on direct examination, nor was any purported transcript or purported copy of any such statement shown him.

[9] As a part of his own case the defendant called the prosecuting witness to the stand, as his own witness. Counsel started to interrogate him as to the matters just referred to. The court sustained the objection on the ground that he could not impeach his own witness. Under section 2049 of the Code of Civil Procedure, this ruling was error, but this can be of no avail to defendant, for the reason that it was an attempt to impeach the witness on an immaterial matter, and that no foundation was laid or attempted to be laid, in accordance with section 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The real objection of the defendant to these rulings, in connection with his attempt to impeach the prosecuting witness, is his contention that he had a right to go into the matters referred to in the above specifications of error. The uncontradicted evidence shows that the witness had, in fact, been assaulted, and whether he knew why he had been assaulted, or what he had heard from other people in reference to the matter was of no materiality. The evidence shows the prosecuting witness had not seen the defendant for between two and three years, and there was no evidence of any threats on the part of the prosecuting witness toward the defendant, and the matters sought to be brought out were incompetent and immaterial.

[10] Appellant next contends that the court erred in refusing to give an instruction requested by him, which contained the following paragraph: "The doctrine of reasonable doubt goes not only to the whole evidence, but equally to every material issue, and if, after a review of all the evidence, including that of the defendant, if any, then if you entertain a reasonable doubt upon any one material issue, it is your duty to give the defendant the benefit of the doubt and acquit him." The court read to the jury section 1096 of the Penal Code, and under section 1096a of the same Code, no further instruction upon that subject need be given.

It is next claimed the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction: "You are instructed that if you find as a fact that the defendant committed the acts complained of in the information herein while in the heat of passion reasonably provoked in him by the conduct of the prosecuting witness, said Fred Raynor, you must not find the defendant guilty of the charge laid in the foundation. The degree of such passion need only to be such as to render the mind of the defendant incapable of cool reflection and self control. It need not have been such that knowledge or volition were destroyed or reason was dethroned. Such passion must have existed at the time of the commission of the act or acts complained of, and it is your duty to determine whether or not such passion did exist, taking into consideration all the circumstances of this particular case, which include the nature of the defendant and the laws of the human mind as well as the nature and the circumstances of the provocation, the extent to which the passions were aroused, and the nature of the act or acts causing the provocation."

[11] Not only was this an attempt to secure an instruction, based upon immaterial matters which were properly excluded from evidence, but the instruction itself is a compilation of various excerpts from the law relating to manslaughter, taken out of their context, not applicable to the facts in this case, and the same was properly refused.

[12] The next assignment of error is, that the court refused to give an instruction requested by the defendant to the effect that the jury might find the defendant guilty of simple assault. The argument is made that the charge of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, necessarily includes the lesser offense of simple assault. Appellant relies upon section 1159 of the Penal Code, which provides that the defendant may be found guilty of any offense, the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged. Under the charge here, the intention with which the assault was committed was a material fact, to be determined by the jury. People v. Fine, 53 Cal. 263. While the evidence would have been sufficient to sustain a conviction upon the original charge of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, the jury has, by its verdict, found that the defendant did not actually intend to commit murder. It does not follow, however, that the jury should have been permitted to find a verdict of simple assault. Where the evidence is such that a verdict of manslaughter cannot legally be found, it has been held not error to fail to instruct as to manslaughter. People v. Turley, 50 Cal. 469; People v. Fellows, 122 Cal. 233, 54 P. 830; People v. DiDonato, 90 Cal. App. 366, 265 P. 978. In People v. Rogers, 163 Cal. 476, 126 P. 143, 145, the court says: "It is thoroughly established in this state that it is proper to refuse to instruct a jury as to a lesser offense or degree included within the offense charged, where the evidence is of such a nature as to warrant, in the event that the defendant is guilty at all, only a verdict for the higher offense or degree." The uncontradicted evidence in these cases shows the defendant was at least guilty of assault with a deadly weapon, in each case, if he was guilty of any offense whatever. In each case the assault was without warning. In the first case the possession of the pistol, the use of the pistol and the intention to so use it, are clearly shown by the uncontradicted evidence, including the statements of the defendant. In the case of the assault with the pocket knife, the evidence shows that the defendant was armed with a knife with a blade three inches long; that he pursued his victim until he caught him, and, having knocked him to the floor, got astride him and repeatedly stabbed him, inflicting twenty-eight separate wounds, five of which penetrated the lung; and that he did not desist until he was pulled off by an officer. In each case, the nature of the weapon used, and the manner of its use, leave no question that the means of assault used in each instance, constituted a "deadly weapon."

[13] We think this evidence did not warrant a verdict of "guilty of simple assault," and the requested instruction could be based only upon the assumption that the jury would not do its duty. To have so instructed the jury would have authorized them to find a verdict not in accordance with the evidence.

[14, 15] Defendant's last assignment of error is that the court erred in imposing the maximum sentence upon each conviction, thinking that such sentences would run concurrently, when, as a matter of law, such sentences will have to be served consecutively. In each of the two cases the defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. Appellant says in his brief, that after passing sentence in each case, the court stated he was of the opinion that such sentences would run concurrently and that the district attorney pointed out that such sentences would run consecutively. There is nothing in the record to show these facts, and nothing to show that the sentences did not represent the intention of the court at the time of imposing sentence. The record shows no objection was made at the time, and if it appeared that the sentence did not represent the court's intention at the time, this matter should have been called to the attention of the trial court. It appears, however, from counsel's statement, that after the law was called to the court's attention by the district attorney, no change in the sentences was made by the trial judge. It must be presumed that the sentences were in accord with the court's intentions.

No prejudicial error being shown, the judgments in both cases are affirmed.

WILD et al. v. ARRAND et al.
Civ. 7257.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.
March 17, 1930.

1. Appeal and error §544(1) — Bill of exceptions — Transcript — Evidence — Review.

There being neither bill of exceptions nor transcript, Court of Appeal was precluded from examining evidence (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 650, 953a et seq.).

2. Appeal and error §907(3) — Bill of exceptions — Transcript — Findings — Review.

Court of Appeal, prevented from examining evidence by absence of bill of exceptions and transcript must take trial court's findings as facts.

3. Exchange of property §13(4) — Consideration — Failure — Finding — Sufficiency.

Finding defendants delivered registration certificate to plaintiffs suing to rescind automobile exchange contract for failure of consideration, and that plaintiffs did not offer to restore property, sustained judgment for defendants (California Vehicle Act 1923, p. 524, § 45(e) as amended by Stats. 1925, p. 402, § 7; Civ. Code, § 1691).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by Bruce M. Wild and another against Mary M. Arrand and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Charles S. Conner, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Winterer, Combs & Ritchie, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem.

This is an action for the rescission of a contract. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendants. The plaintiffs appeal.

[1, 2] The only point presented for a reversal of the judgment is the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings of fact. The evidence taken at the trial is not before us. There is neither a bill of exceptions prepared in accordance with section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure nor a transcript of the evidence under the provisions of section 953a et seq. of said Code. We are therefore precluded from examining the evidence. Bell v. Brigance, 194 Cal. 445, 229 P. 27; Philbrook v. Randall, 195 Cal. 95, 231 P. 739. Under such circumstances the findings of the trial court must be accepted as the facts of the case. Spring Valley Water Co. v. County of Alameda, 88 Cal. App. 157, 263 P. 318.

[3] Plaintiffs claim that the title to a certain automobile which they received under the terms of the contract never vested in them, and therefore there was a failure of consideration. Section 45(e) p. 524, California Vehicle Act of 1923, as amended by section 7 of Act of 1925, p. 402. On this subject the court found: "That on or about the 23d day of November, 1923, and within a reasonable time after said exchange, defendants secured a certificate of registration for the said Mitchell car from the State of California, and delivered the same to plaintiffs, and at the said time defendants offered to transfer the said certificate of registration to plaintiffs, but plaintiffs refused to accept such transfer."

The court also found that appellants did not restore or offer to restore what they had received from the defendant. Section 1691, Civ. Code.

These findings are sufficient to sustain the judgment.

No error has been shown. The judgment is affirmed.

RIDENS v. ECONOMY HOME BUILDERS, Inc., et al.

Civ. No. 7264.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 25, 1930.

1. Mechanics' Liens §302 — Foreclosure — Deficiency Judgment — Party liable.

Deficiency judgment in lien foreclosure proceedings is proper only against party personally liable under statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1194).

2. Mechanics' Liens §304(1) — Deficiency Judgment — Agency — Independent contractor — Personal liability.

If corporation employing laborer was agent of owner and not independent contractor, owner would be party personally liable and subject to deficiency judgment under statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1194).

3. Appeal and error §934(1) — Presumption — Judgment — Regularity.

Appellate Court must presume regularity of judgment.

4. Appeal and error §1026 — Prejudicial errors — Objection to findings — Review.

Appellate Court considers only prejudicial errors, especially where point was not raised by objection to findings under statute (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 634, 663).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George J. Thompson, Judge.

Action by J. C. Ridens against the Economy Home Builders, Inc., and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Thomas Berry appeals.

Affirmed.

Dana R. Weller, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, Acting P. J.

Plaintiff sued to foreclose a mechanic's lien. He had judgment against defendant Berry alone for $518.70. The appeal is on typewritten transcripts.

The cause was dismissed as to all defendants other than Berry, the owner of the premises where the labor was performed. As to him plaintiff proved every essential element justifying his claim to a foreclosure of his lien. The defendant offered no defense. Findings and judgment were prepared and signed in which it was decreed that plaintiff have judgment in foreclosure "and for such lien purposes only." But the judgment contained a direction that if the proceeds of the sale should be insufficient, a deficiency judgment for the amount unpaid should be entered in favor of plaintiff.

[1, 2] On this appeal, error is predicated upon the latter portion of the judgment. It is error, of course, unless the appellant is "the party personally liable therefor" within the meaning of section 1194, Code of Civil Procedure. There is some evidence in the record showing the appellant executed a conditional sales contract with its codefendant Economy Home Builders, Inc., whereby the corporation agreed to subdivide the premises, erect homes thereon, and sell the same for the benefit of the appellant. The contract is not in the record, and no other evidence of its terms was offered. The trial court found that the respondent's services, which are the basis of his claim of lien, were engaged by the corporation, and the respondent now argues that it is a fair inference from the evidence that, in this respect, the corporation was merely the agent of appellant and that the appellant was, in reality, the contractor for whom the services were performed. If the corporation was but an agent of the appellant for this purpose, and not an independent contractor, then the appellant would be the party personally liable for the services, under section 1194, and the deficiency judgment against him was proper.

[3, 4] We must presume the regularity of the judgment, and the fact that the point was not raised in the trial court by objection to the findings under section 634, Code of Civil Procedure, or by motion under section 663, Code of Civil Procedure, indicates that the appellant did not deem the error, if any, prejudicial. The lien is for a comparatively small sum. It covers a number of lots of land, the proceeds from the sale of any one of which may be sufficient to satisfy the judgment. We have frequently said that we are here to consider only such errors as are shown to be prejudicial. The matter complained of is not of that character.

Judgment affirmed.

MATTESON v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES.

Civ. 5872.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 22, 1930.

1. Mandamus ☞163 — Petition — Legal sufficiency — Demurrer.

Respondent in mandamus proceeding has right to test legal sufficiency of petition for writ by demurrer thereto (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1084-1097, 1109).

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1084-1097, contains no direct provisions for a demurrer to petition for writ of mandate, but section 1109, however, provides that except as otherwise provided in that portion of the Code relating to writs of review, mandate, and prohibition, the provisions of part 2, which relate to procedure in civil actions generally, are applicable to and constitute the rules of practice in proceedings mentioned in title.

2. Mandamus ☞163 — Demurrer — Allegations — Conformity to statute.

That demurrer alleged facts stated in petition for mandamus did not entitle petitioner to relief, instead using language of statute, was immaterial (Code Civ. Proc. § 430).

3. Pleading ☞189 — Demurrer — Purpose — Legal sufficiency.

Purpose of general demurrer is to raise issue as to legal sufficiency of facts pleaded and for purpose of demurrer deemed true.

4. Appeal and error ☞193(9) — Objections in lower court — Pleading — Legal sufficiency.

Legal sufficiency of facts may be raised at any state of proceedings, even for first time on appeal from judgment.

5. Pleading ☞208 — Demurrer — Specification — Want of facts.

Generally, no particular specification is required in demurrer for want of facts.

6. Limitation of actions ☞180(2) — Pleading — Defect on face — Demurrer.

Bar of limitations may be set up by demurrer, where defect appears on face of petition or complaint.

7. Pleading ☞218(1) — Demurrer — Argument — Right to open and close.

Demurring party always has right to open and close argument on demurrer.

8. Constitutional law ☞310 — Due process — Judgment on pleadings — Demurrer.

Denial of right to present and argue petition on motion for judgment on pleadings consisting of petition and demurrer thereto was not denial of due process (Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

9. Schools and school districts ☞131 — Teachers — Life diploma — Employment — Particular school.

Possession of life diploma did not confer right on holder thereof to pick out any school in state and demand employment (Pol. Code, § 1696).

Pol. Code, § 1696, requires a teacher before assuming charge of a school to file his or her certificate with superintendent of schools with the proviso that, when any teacher so employed holds an educational or a life diploma, upon presentation thereof to the superintendent he shall record the name of such holder in a book provided for that purpose in his office, and the holder thereof shall be absolved from provisions of subdivision.

10. Mandamus ☞151(2) — Parties — Board of education — Enrollment as teacher — County superintendent.

Petition for writ of mandate to require board of education to enroll name on list of eligible teachers, failing to make county superintendent party thereto, was defective (Pol. Code, § 1696).

11. Limitation of actions ☞34(1) — Mandamus — Board of education — Employment of teacher — Date of diploma — Discharge.

Petition to require board of education to enroll name on list of eligible teachers filed approximately 8½ years after date of diploma and discharge was barred (Code Civ. Proc. § 338).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Petition for writ of mandate by A. G. Matteson, Sr., against the Board of Education of the City of Los Angeles. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the petition, petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

A. G. Matteson, Sr., in pro. per.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and Ernest R. Purdum, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem.

The appellant, appearing in propria persona throughout these proceedings, filed in the superior court a verified document entitled "Petition for Court Order," which, although obviously prepared without legal assistance, may be here regarded as it was in the court below, as a petition for a writ of mandate. Omitting most of the numerous conclusions of law stated in the petition, it contains the following allegations of fact: Petitioner was employed by the respondent as a secondary grade teacher on September 1, 1912, and continued as such until his discharge "without cause" on June 30, 1919; at all times since the last-mentioned date he has "diligently sought reelection to and employment in" his position as a teacher, secondary grade, "as attested by" his life diploma entitling him to teach in all the "public educational institutions" in the state, but has been at all times refused and denied employment in any of the city schools, although the respondent has admitted and still admits his "particular educational, technical and practical competency"; the respondent has refused to "restore and record" petitioner's name on the list of eligible teachers of the city of Los Angeles. The relief prayed for is an order directing the respondent to enroll petitioner's name upon the list of eligible teachers, secondary grade, "or appear and show cause" for its refusal to do so. To this petition the respondent interposed a demurrer alleging that the facts stated in the petition did not entitle the petitioner to any relief and that it appeared on the face of the petition that the action was barred by the provisions of section 338, Code of Civil Procedure. The demurrer having been sustained without leave to amend, the judgment was entered from which this appeal is taken.

The grounds upon which appellant urges a reversal of the judgment (and asks that we order the writ to issue) are the following, to wit:

1. That our laws do not permit the interposition of a demurrer to a petition for a writ of mandate, hence that the so-called demurrer should have been treated merely as an unverified answer to a verified petition, thus entitling petitioner to a judgment on the pleadings;

2. That the form of the demurrer, regarded as such, was insufficient;

3. That the statute of limitations may not be set up by demurrer;

4. That the petitioner was by law entitled to the opening and closing arguments upon the hearing of the demurrer, and that the court erred in permitting the county counsel, appearing for the respondent, to usurp that right;

5. That a teacher's "life diploma" empowers its holder to compel any school district he may select to employ him;

6. That petitioner's "federal rights" have been denied.

[1] As to the first point, it is true that the chapter of the Code of Civil Procedure dealing with the writ of mandate (sections 1084-1097) contains no direct provision for a demurrer to the petition, the only pleading on the part of the respondent specifically mentioned being an answer under oath, but it is likewise true that section 1109 of the same Code provides that except as otherwise provided in that portion of the Code relating to writs of review, mandate, and prohibition, the provisions of part 2, which relate to the procedure in civil actions generally, "are applicable to and constitute the rules of practice in the proceedings mentioned in this title." The right of the respondent in a mandamus proceeding to test the legal sufficiency of the petition for a writ by demurrer thereto has always been recognized by the courts of this state. 16 Cal. Jur. 866; Barber v. Mulford, 117 Cal. 356, 49 P. 206; Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Rolph, 184 Cal. 557, 564, 194 P. 1005; Los Angeles City School Dist. v. Odell, 200 Cal. 637, 254 P. 570; Bailey v. Security Trust Co., 34 Cal. App. 348, 167 P. 409; Pavilion Ice Rink v. Bryant, 58 Cal. App. 584, 209 P. 76; Stewart v. Eaves, 84 Cal. App. 312, 257 P. 917.

In support of his contention as to the form of the demurrer, appellant argues:

"That if same was incubated to perform the office of general demurrer, it is believed that the poetic euphony of same is only exceeded by the juridical nullity thereof, as the unity of expression of the statute and not inartificial, revolutionary poetic license, determines with equal simplicity and exactitude, the correct form of the demurrer, and as waivable matter, the due form of the statute should not have been rejected to petitioners embarrassment and prejudice for any vague substitute, despite its el canto cadence or poetic lure.

"It is as hazardous to encourage the peculiar and too prevalent impulse and urge of ultra Americans to evade or violate the settled forms of law by the native pale, pink pallor persuasion, as it is dangerous to temporize with the red, rancorous and revolutionary foreign variety, and it not only behooves all those posited in the forums of leadership to meticulously observe and follow the spirit of our laws, but to practice the same without abating one jot from the letter thereof, lest the somewhat delicate balance favoring law and order be reversed and liberate the pandemonium of Milton to the encouragement of a rampant, rapacious, bomb throwing, revolutionary Moscow."

We find nothing in the record, nor is any authority cited to us, from which we may conclude that the dire results so graphically depicted by appellant will, as a necessary consequence, follow the county counsel's departure from the exact language of the code section. As for the foreign entanglements to which he alludes we can only say that the whole subject of the relations between this country and other nations is beyond our jurisdiction and rests entirely with the President and Congress. U. S. Const., art. 1, §§ 8, 10; art. 2, § 2.

[2-5] The fact that the demurrer alleges "that the facts stated in said petition do not entitle the petitioner to the relief demanded or to any relief," instead of averring, in the language of section 430 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action," is immaterial. The two statements mean exactly the same thing. The purpose of a general demurrer is to raise the issue as to the legal sufficiency of the facts pleaded, and for the purpose of the demurrer deemed true, to warrant the granting of relief to the pleader. That issue, which may be raised at any state of the proceedings, even for the first time on appeal from the judgment (2 Cal. Jur. 257 and cases there cited) was squarely presented by the demurrer herein. Nor is there merit in the theory advanced by appellant that it was incumbent upon the respondent to specify the particulars in which the petition was insufficient. It is the general rule "that no particular specification is required in a demurrer for want of facts." California Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Sierra, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 690, 112 P. 274, 278, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 729; Kent v. Snyder, 80 Cal. 666.

[6] That the bar of the statute of limitations may be set up by demurrer where the defect appears on the face of the petition or complaint is too well settled to warrant discussion. California Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Sierra, etc., Co., supra; Smith v. Richmond, 19 Cal. 476; Sutherland's Code Pleading, § 323; 21 Cal. Jur. 107; 16 Cal. Jur. 606.

[7] Upon the point that most grievous error was committed by the court in permitting the county counsel to open the argument when the demurrer came on for hearing appellant's brief contains the following pertinent and persuasive argument:

"It is with dread and almost dismay that petitioner now approaches the trial; of which he is forced to relate events so strange and ultra juris as never yet heard of a Coram judice proceeding.

"On 31 May 27, at the trial hereof, defendants' counsel claimed and usurped petitioners strict legal right to open and petitioner was forced to suffer this tyrannous pernicious, rapacious desecration and total but ephemeral subversion of the sacred dictums of the precepts of jurisprudence, namely 'Juris Praecepta Sunt Haec, honeste vivere, alturam non lacerare, suum cique tribure, the greatest of which is that the law must hear before it decides, and it must hear the affirmative first.

"This precept of natural equity and justice was maintained through the absolutism of Feudal England by the great oracle of law, Sir Edward Coke, whom, upon being summoned before King Charles to answer why he, Coke, and his brother justices of Kings Bench opposed the prerogative of the King to decide causes between his subjects without hearing both, either or the affirmative sides first, answered the King, saying: Thus wrote Bracton, 'Rex non debet esse sub homine, sed sub Deo et lege' (1 Campbell 393).

"Upon this oracular authority it is shown that despotic Kings of feudal times were prevented by the law of the land from accroaching the right to open and be heard, therefore petitioner challenges adverse counsel for the county of Los Angeles to justify himself in arrogating this interdicted power to himself.

"To fully stigmatize such usurpation would possibly exhaust the volcanic, viriolic invective of the peerless Sir Edward Coke himself, and as it is difficult to discuss this revolutionary act with moderation it is accounted for upon the ground that 'Man, proud man, dressed in a little brief authority, cuts such capers before high heaven as make the angels weep' Shake. * * * 'Measure for Measure.'

"Although county counsel procured thus, a great advantage, to the dire prejudice of Petitioner's legal rights, Petitioner contents himself with the knowledge that in contemplation of law such procedure is in contravention thereof and is therefore open and now is subjected to review, without rancor or malice as Petitioner has ever practised and taught moderation and has met all past, and will meet all prospective assaults on law and order and the abuse thereof with all expedient and expeditious consideration, with patient but adamant opposition, as the heirophants [sic] of history agree that a multitude of ignorant men will ruin the courts, 'Multitudo imperitorum perdit ciriam' (Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. 496) and that thereafter juridical anarchy may reign until the foundation of society dissolve.

"Indifference, ignorance or disrespect for the law of the land and the due process thereof has commanded just rebuke, which has heretofore been pronounced by this High Court respecting the right to open 'The plaintiff, always in contemplation of law, has the affirmative, and has the right to open and conclude' (Benham v. Rowe, 2 Cal. 387, 56 Am. Dec. 342) applying 'Audi alteram partem' (Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274, 23 L. Ed. 914)."

While we have the greatest respect for the authorities above quoted, we feel that appellant must continue, unaided by this court, to practice those principles of Christian fortitude and forbearance his addiction to which is admitted by his brief, since the demurring party under our practice always has the right to open and close the argument on the demurrer.

[8] It is appellant's theory that his "federal rights," as well as his rights under the Constitution of this state, were violated by the denial of "his lawful right to present and argue his petition and motion for judgment on the pleadings as such denial rendered the proceeding coram non iudice, without the pale of law, in excess of the court's jurisdiction and violative of due process of law and the state and United States Constitution. (Const. of Cal., art. 4, §§ 2, 11, 21, 23; Const. of U. S., 14th amendment.)" Examining those provisions of our own Constitution which appellant cites as having been violated by the action of the court, we find that section 2 of article 4 provides for biennial and bifurcated sections of the Legislature, section 11 of the same article relates to legislative immunity from arrest, section 21 to ineligibility for public office by reason of conviction of certain crimes, and section 23 to the salaries of members of the Legislature. We are unable to discover in what manner any right of appellant under any of these provisions has been affected. Nor do we find that there has been any denial of due process of law to appellant or any abridgment of his privileges or immunities by reason of any of the matters appearing in the record. No such procedure as a motion for judgment on the pleadings prior to the filing of an answer is known to our law. Appellant, in preparing and presenting such a motion, very evidently labored under the mistaken theory that the demurrer should be regarded as an unverified answer which failed to put in issue the material averments of his petition.

[9] Consideration of the sufficiency of the facts set forth in the petition to warrant the relief sought involves a discussion of appellant's contention as to the effect of his possession of a life diploma. Section 1696 of the Political Code, on which appellant relies as requiring the recordation of such diplomas, has to do with the duties of teachers. The first subdivision of the section requires a teacher, "before assuming charge of a school" to "file his or her certificate with the superintendent of schools" with the proviso that "when any teacher so employed" holds "an educational or a life diploma of California, upon presentation thereof to the superintendent he shall record the name of said holder in a book provided for that purpose in his office, and the holder of said diploma shall thereupon be absolved from the provisions of this subdivision." (Italics ours.) It is obvious that the provision from which the holder of such a diploma may be absolved is that requiring him to file his certificate with the superintendent before assuming charge of a school in which he has actually been employed as a teacher. Most certainly it cannot be construed as conferring the right on the holder of such a diploma to pick out any school in the state, regardless of whether or not there is a vacancy therein and demand that he be there employed. "The power to employ teachers is given to city boards of education by section 1617 Pol. Code, which, as was said in Kennedy v. Board of Education, 82 Cal. 483, 22 P. 1042, 'confers upon boards of education unlimited power to employ teachers.'" Bradley v. Board of Education, 1 Cal. App. 212, 81 P. 1036, 1037. "It has been uniformly held in this state that in the absence of a constitutional or statutory limitation, boards of education may exercise an unlimited discretion in the employment and dismissal of teachers, as well as in their transfer and assignment." Loehr v. Board of Education, 12 Cal. App. 671, 108 P. 325, 327. "Here the right of removal stands alone; and it has been uniformly held in this state that boards of education may exercise an unlimited discretion in the employment and dismissal of teachers under like employment with appellant." Catania v. Board of Education, 37 Cal. App. 593, at page 597, 174 P. 332, 334. While these cases are no longer authorities on the power to discharge, on account of the amendments passed to section 1609 introducing teachers' tenure, there have been no statutory amendments imposing any restrictions upon the unlimited discretion vested in the board to employ what ever qualified person it may select. In another case somewhat analogous in principle it is said: "This is a proceeding in mandate to compel the board of education of the city of San Bernardino school district to prefer the plaintiff for appointment and employment as a janitor of the high school building of said city, and to retain and continue him as such, under an act of the legislature, approved March 31, 1891; he being an honorably discharged ex-Union soldier of the War of the Rebellion. * * * The petitioner was employed for the period of one year as janitor, and a few days prior to the expiration of the term was discharged and another party appointed to the place. After the expiration of the year, he began this proceeding. A demurrer was sustained to the petition, and this appeal was taken from the judgment entered thereon. * * * If a man filling the demands set forth in the act of the legislature has the preference, then this petitioner does not show but that there are hundreds of men possessing the qualifications that he possesses who are ready and willing and anxious to be employed as janitor by this board of education. If there be other ex-Union soldiers equally qualified with petitioner, he has no absolute right to the place, and the board cannot be compelled by mandate to appoint him. In other words, he would only be entitled to the writ upon a showing made that he was the only man coming within the provisions of the act who was desirous of the appointment. The petition before us entirely fails to make such a showing." Allison v. Board of Education, 125 Cal. 72, 57 P. 673.

[10] Another fatal defect in the petition is that the county superintendent of Los Angeles county was not made a party. The duty of recording the name of the holder of a life diploma, where, under section 1696 of the Political Code, such holder is entitled to such recordation, devolves by the terms of that section upon the superintendent, not upon the city board of education, which is the only party named as respondent in the petition herein.

[11] It further appears from the life diploma, a copy of which is attached to the petition as an exhibit, that the same was issued to appellant October 1, 1919. His petition alleges that "defendants' mistaken, wrongful and unlawful refusal to recognize and give due respect and effect to the authority of" his life diploma has continued ever since his discharge in 1919. His petition in this proceeding was filed in May, 1927, approximately eight and a half years after the dates of his diploma and of his discharge. His right of action, if he ever had any, was barred by limitation. Harby v. Board of Education, 2 Cal. App. 418, 83 P. 1081; Kramer v. Board of Police Commissioners, 39 Cal. App. 396, 179 P. 216; Barber v. Mulford, 117 Cal. 356, 49 P. 206.

The petition failed to state facts sufficient to warrant any relief, and the demurrer was rightly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

INS. CO. OF PITTSBURGH, PA.
Civ. 3683.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

March 18, 1930.

I. Trusts — §86 — Resulting trusts — Transfer to third person — Consideration — Presumption.

Trust is presumed to have resulted in favor of one paying full consideration for transfer of property to another (Civ. Code § 853).

2. Insurance — §282(3) — Unconditional and sole ownership — Consideration.

Interest of one paying full consideration for property transferred to another was that of unconditional and sole ownership within fire policy (Civ. Code § 762).

The evidence disclosed that the insured had paid the full consideration for property and that title was acquired by the deed in which insured and wife were named as grantees, though person named as his wife was not in fact his wife during any of the time material, but was his housekeeper during such period.

3. Trusts — §88 — Resulting trust — Proof — Parol evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County;
W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by John Nasaroff against the National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

James Sykes, of San Francisco, for appellant.

M. S. Wahrhaftig, of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J.

The plaintiff brought this action to recover on a fire insurance policy covering buildings and furniture and fixtures, which were destroyed by fire. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed.

The answer alleges that the plaintiff, with intent to defraud the defendant, caused the property to be burned. The jury found against this defense, and the appellant concedes that such finding is conclusive on appeal. The policy provides:

"Unless otherwise provided by agreement endorsed hereon or added hereto, this entire policy shall be void, * * * if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership, or if the subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple."

Plaintiff's title was acquired by a deed in which plaintiff, John Nasaroff, and "Natalie Nasaroff, his wife," are named as grantees. It appears from the evidence that the true name of the woman described in the deed as the plaintiff's wife is Natalie Oshen, and that she was not his wife during any of the time which is material here, but that during all of that time she was the plaintiff's housekeeper, both of them having been married and both having children, all of which children lived in the plaintiff's home and were cared for by

Mrs. Oshen. On cross-examination the plaintiff was asked: "And you have lived with this Natalie Nasaroff as your wife?" He answered: "Not as his wife." The form of the answer is due to the fact that the plaintiff testified through an inexperienced interpreter. In the name of "Natalie Nasaroff," Mrs. Oshen joined the plaintiff in the execution of a trust deed conveying the property in question as security for the payment of money borrowed by the plaintiff, she, being unable to write, signing by her mark. The plaintiff testified that at the time he purchased the property he intended to marry Mrs. Oshen, that he paid the whole of the purchase price thereof and that "nobody else * * * ever had any interest" therein. Mrs. Oshen testified that she paid nothing for the property, that she "never accepted it from anybody as property belonging to" her, that the plaintiff never talked to her about naming her in the deed, that she never knew her name appeared therein, that she had no interest in the property, and that she and the plaintiff owned no property together.

Appellant seems to contend that the only inference from the evidence is that the plaintiff and Mrs. Oshen lived together in the relation of husband and wife without the formality of a marriage, but the plaintiff's statement that she did not live with him "as his wife," while equivocal, is sufficient to warrant a finding by the jury against such contention. If it was material to the defendant's case to show that the plaintiff and Mrs. Oshen were living together in a meretricious relation, more certain proof thereof should have been made.

[1, 2] The plaintiff having paid the full consideration for the transfer of the property to Mrs. Oshen, a trust is presumed to have resulted in his favor, under which he was the equitable owner of the property of which she held the naked legal title. Civ. Code, § 853. His interest in the insured property, therefore, in accordance with such presumption, and as proved by the testimony of himself and Mrs. Oshen, was that of "unconditional and sole ownership" within the meaning of that term as used in the policy. "An insured's ownership is sole when no one else has any interest in the property as owner, and is unconditional when the quality of the estate is not limited or affected by any condition." 14 R. C. L. 1053. The building was on ground owned by the plaintiff in "fee simple." "Every estate of inheritance is a fee, and every such estate, when not defeasible or conditional, is a fee-simple or an absolute fee." Civ. Code, § 762. "An equitable title in the insured is a sufficient compliance with the condition in question." McCullough v. Home Ins. Co., 155 Cal. 659, 662, 102 P. 814, 815, 18 Ann. Cas. 862; Lee v. United States Fire Ins. Co., 55 Cal. App. 391, 394, 203 P. 774; Ramirez v. United Fire- men's Ins. Co., 46 Cal. App. 451, 453, 189 P. 309.

[3] Appellant contends that it was error to admit the foregoing evidence of Mrs. Oshen, but the facts which establish a resulting trust may be proved by parol evidence. 25 Cal. Jur. 179.

The judgment is affirmed.

Escrow relating to oil lease extension agreement, open from April 18, 1924, until May 25, 1925, held open reasonable time to deposit deeds, where time was not limited by escrow.

Contract provided for extension of lease for oil and gas lands in consideration of transfer of certain land which was incumbered at the time of making agreement, and escrow was to give time to remove incumbrances.

2. Escrow ⇨8(1)—Abandonment — Delivery — Effect.

Where escrow is abandoned, delivery of instrument in escrow becomes ineffectual for any purpose (Civ. Code, §§ 1054, 1057, 1059).

3. Mines and minerals ⇨75 — Oil and gas lease — Extension agreement — Nondelivery.

Where extension of oil and gas lease, though signed, was never delivered, extension agreement was ineffectual (Code Civ. Proc. § 1933; Civ. Code, §§ 1053, 1626, 1627).

4. Appeal and error ⇨1170(7) — Reversal — Technical error — Evidence — Exclusion — Extension of lease.

Excluding evidence of signing of oil lease extension agreement, if error, held harmless, in action for rent, where agreement had never been delivered (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

5. Mines and minerals ⇨73 — Oil and gas lease — Estoppel — Knowledge of facts.

Lessor held not estopped to deny execution of oil lease extension agreement, where lessee knew facts.

Lessee knew extension agreement respecting oil and gas lease had been put in escrow and had not fulfilled escrow conditions to be performed by him. Lessor failed during this time to demand monthly rental due during pendency of escrow.

CRAIG, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county against him in the sum of $14,000 and costs.

On or about June 2, 1923, plaintiff, as lessor, and defendant, as lessee, entered into a written oil and gas lease of certain real property for a term of twenty years (unless said period be terminated earlier under the provisions thereof). The lessee agreed "to pay the Lessor a monthly rental of $800.00 per month from June 25, 1923, payable on the 25th day of each and every calendar month, the first monthly payment to be made on June 25, 1923, and said rental to continue until the said lessee shall have actually commenced drilling operations on the first well provided for herein, at which time the said monthly rental shall cease, the said rental shall also cease in the event the lease be terminated as herein provided. * * *" The lease then provided, in substance, that, if lessee did not commence drilling operations within twelve months thereafter, the lessor could declare the lease terminated on thirty days' notice; also, that "lessee may at any time before the discovery of oil on the demised premises, quitclaim the said property, or any part thereof, to lessor, * * * and thereupon all rights and obligations of the parties hereto, one to the other, shall thereupon cease and determine as to the premises quitclaimed."

Defendant paid nine monthly installments of rent; i. e., to and including the installment which became due on February 25, 1924. No drilling operations were ever commenced.

Plaintiff commenced this action on July 30, 1925, praying for $12,000. On September 10, 1925, defendant quitclaimed the premises to plaintiff. On November 29, 1925, plaintiff filed an amended and supplemental complaint praying for $14,400 for unpaid rental from March 25, 1924 (inclusive), to and including the installment of August 25, 1925. The judgment was granted as prayed for by plaintiff, except that the installment of August 25, 1925, was prorated to September 10, 1925.

Defendant's principal defense was, in substance, that, on or about April 11, 1924, defendant and plaintiff entered into a written agreement wherein defendant agreed to convey to plaintiff certain real property at a valuation of $6,600 "in exchange for an extension agreement extending the time for drilling the first well * * * for an additional period of twelve months from June 2, 1924. No further payments of rental provided for in said lease to be made to the lessor other than those payments made at this date. Good and valid extension agreement to be entered into between the parties of said lease." Plaintiff denied ever signing such agreement.

Appellant in his opening brief presents three points: (1) The trial court committed prejudicial error in refusing to allow appellant to prove that respondent signed the alleged agreement of April 11, 1924; (2) the trial court committed prejudicial error in refusing to allow appellant to prove, by secondary evidence, the alleged agreement of April 11, 1924; and (3), even though respondent did not sign the purported agreement of April 11, 1924, she is estopped by her actions to deny that she did.

Points 1 and 2 may be considered together. For the purpose of this portion of the present discussion we will take the evidence which appellant attempted to offer, together with the evidence received, and will disregard the findings of the court adverse to appellant, thereby placing the whole matter in the most favorable light to appellant.

The uncontradicted facts show that on or about April 11, 1924, plaintiff and defendant had a conversation in reference to the lease. That at about that time Fred D. Turner, business manager of defendant, prepared, in triplicate, the said alleged agreement of April 11, 1924, hereinafter referred to as the extension agreement. One copy, unsigned by any one, was retained by said Turner in the office files of defendant. Beyond question one copy was signed by appellant and given to respondent, but this copy was produced in court and was not signed by respondent. The third copy was not produced. Let us therefore assume that respondent did sign it and that its contents were identical with the other copies as defendant claims that he attempted to show at the trial.

"The execution of an instrument is the subscribing and delivering it, with or without affixing a seal." Code Civ. Proc. § 1933. The term "execution" as applied to instruments in writing is considered as importing both a signing and a delivery. Ivey v. Kern County Land Co., 115 Cal. 196, 46 P. 926.

"A contract in writing takes effect upon its delivery to the party in whose favor it is made, or to his agent." Civ. Code, § 1626. "Delivery of the instrument is the final act essential to its consummation as an obligation." Loud v. Collins, 12 Cal. App. 786, 789, 108 P. 880, 881; Gas App. S. Co. v. Bastian Mfg. Co., 87 Cal. App. 301, 305, 262 P. 452.

"A transfer in writing is called a grant, or conveyance, or bill of sale. The term 'grant,' in this and the next two articles, includes all these instruments, unless it is specially applied to real property." Civ. Code, § 1053. The term "grant," as used in the definition of an escrow given by the Civil Code, is comprehensive enough to include instruments other than deeds. 10 Cal. Jur. 577. "The provisions of the chapter on transfers in general, concerning the delivery of grants, absolute and conditional, apply to all written contracts." Civ. Code, § 1627.

"A grant takes effect, so as to vest the interest intended to be transferred, only upon its delivery by the grantor." Civ. Code, § 1054.

"A grant may be deposited by the grantor with a third person, to be delivered on performance of a condition, and, on delivery by the depository, it will take effect. While in the possession of the third person, and subject to condition, it is called an escrow." Civ. Code, § 1057.

"Though a grant be not actually delivered into the possession of the grantee, it is yet to be deemed constructively delivered in the following cases:

"1. Where the instrument is, by the agreement of the parties at the time of execution, understood to be delivered, and under such circumstances that the grantee is entitled to immediate delivery; or,

"2. Where it is delivered to a stranger for the benefit of the grantee, and his assent is shown, or may be presumed." Civ. Code, § 1059.

Throughout the whole case there is no contention on the part of appellant that there was ever a delivery of the extension agreement to appellant or that it was ever placed beyond the control of respondent (except possibly while in escrow).

Defendant O. Bernard Smith testified in part as follows: "A Mrs. Rockefeller came in and she brought this document with her. She had taken it away when I made it and she said, 'I will accept your proposition.' I told her that the lots in question here were encumbered and it would have to be put in escrow so I would have time to clear these lots. * * * A. I said I would put it in the Citizens Trust & Savings Bank, and she said, 'That is all right.' * * *

The witness Fred D. Turner, produced on behalf of defendant, testified in part that he was business manager of Mr. Smith and took care of all details of his transactions, that he prepared the extension document in triplicate; "that one was filed (in Mr. Smith's office), one was placed in escrow at the Citizens Trust & Savings Bank, and one was handed to Mrs. Rockefeller"; that Mr. Smith told Mrs. Rockefeller "that the lots could not be delivered at that time, otherwise he would turn over the deed to the lots and take the extension at the same time"; that Mrs. Rockefeller said "that would be satisfactory to put the extension agreement in escrow up against the deed of Mr. Smith"; that he personally accompanied Mrs. Rockefeller to the bank; and "Q. How did you happen to go to that bank? A. It was explained to Mrs. Rockefeller that this property that was coming to her was held in trust there and it would be the simplest place to handle a proposition of this kind. Q. Why was it necessary or thought necessary for you to accompany her to the bank? A. She had the extension agreement, that was her property. Q. Why was it necessary for you to go there with her? A. I went there to the bank to show her who to go to. This trust property was handled by one party. It would simplify the matter if he had all the papers, and he was to turn over the deed to her and to turn the extension agreement over to him (Smith). I took her there to show her where she should go."

Apparently no escrow instruction was ever given by defendant. Plaintiff's escrow instructions, under date of April 18, 1924, are as follows: "I herewith hand you an extension agreement which you are authorized to deliver to O. Bernard Smith, when you hold for me deed covering lots 31, 32 and 33, block 5, tract 6220, and certificate of title covering said property, showing title vested in Eunice E. Rockefeller, a married woman, free and clear of all encumbrances, except second half of 1923-24 taxes and subsequent. [Signed] Eunice E. Rockefeller."

[1] The escrow was opened about April 18, 1924. About May 25, 1925, the papers theretofore deposited by plaintiff were withdrawn by her. The deeds were never deposited by appellant. If the time is not limited by the terms of the escrow, appellant was bound to perform the conditions of the escrow within a reasonable length of time. Civ. Code, § 1657. We think that in this matter respondent allowed appellant a reasonable time between the opening of the escrow and the withdrawal from escrow for compliance by him with the escrow requirements.

[2] Where the escrow is abandoned, delivery of the instrument in escrow becomes ineffectual for any purpose. Whitney v. Sherman, 178 Cal. 435, 173 P. 931.

[3, 4] No delivery having been effected or wrongfully withheld, the extension agreement is ineffectual. It is therefore our conclusion that errors, if any there be, of the trial court in excluding evidence of the signing of the extension agreement by respondent and of the actual contents of such agreement, did not "result in a miscarriage of justice" within the meaning of that phrase under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution.

Appellant states that the case of Bauer v. State, 144 Cal. 740, 78 P. 280, is decisive of the question presented by point 1. We have studied that case and find that it is not in point, for the reason that the testimony therein offered and rejected, in addition to testimony of signing, included testimony that as so signed the documents had been delivered to the witness as agent for the assignor of the plaintiff in that case.

[5] As to appellant's third point, to wit, estoppel, the answer thereto is against appellant's contention. In order for an estoppel to exist, it is essential that the party claiming the estoppel shall have been ignorant of the true state of facts. Stoner v. Security Trust Co., 47 Cal. App. 216, 190 P. 500; Barstow v. Savage Mining Co., 64 Cal. 388, 1 P. 349, 49 Am. Rep. 705. There is no claim or suggestion of a claim on the part of appellant that he was ignorant of any of the true facts in the matter or that respondent misled him as regards the facts in any particular. He does claim that he relied upon the extension agreement. This agreement, however, was in escrow to his full knowledge. If he relied thereon it was in ignorance of the law and not of the facts. He further claims that he was misled to his prejudice by the failure of respondent to demand the monthly rentals during the pendency of the escrow. We see no merit to this contention. Respondent's failure to demand rentals during the pendency of the escrow to us is but evidence of her good faith and willingness to abide by the agreement then in escrow.

The judgment is affirmed.

LUKE v. SOUTHERN SURETY CO.
Civ. 6344.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
March 28, 1930.

1. Mechanics' liens — 313, 315 — Contractor's bond — Liability.

Surety and building contractor may make any bond acceptable to owner, and surety cannot be held beyond express terms of that bond.

2. Mechanics' liens — 313 — Building bond — Rights of materialmen.

If building bond did not meet requirements of mechanics' lien statute, materialman was entitled to lien upon property irrespective of contract price (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, in substance, gives mechanics lien upon property on which they have labored, and contains further provision for giving and filing of bond.

3. Mechanics' liens — 315 — Claim — Recording — Liability on bond.

Mechanic's lien claimant is not required to record claim of lien as prerequisite to suit on contractor's bond.

4. Mechanics' liens — 313 — Building bond — Filing statement — Impossibility of performance.

Requirement in building contractor's bond as to filing verified statement with public board held impossible of performance, where bond covered private work (Code Civ. Proc. § 1187; Public Works Act, § 2).

Building contractor's bond for benefit of materialmen and laborers was executed on form ordinarily used on public works, and contained provision requiring filing of verified statement of claim with public board, as prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, and Public Works Act, § 2 (St. 1919, p. 487).

5. Mechanics' liens — 317 — Statute — Application — Suit on contractor's bond.

Statute requiring suit to enforce mechanics' liens to be commenced within ninety days after filing of lien held inapplicable to suit on building contractor's bond (Code Civ. Proc. § 1190).

6. Mechanics' liens — 313 — Contractor's completion bond — Surety's liability.

Subcontractor's claim for materials and labor furnished under building contract held not covered by contractor's completion bond to owner.

Contractor's completion bond provided that no right of action shall accrue under this bond to or for use of any person other than said owner.

CRAIG, Justice pro tem.

This is an action by a subcontractor against the surety of a building contractor on a private work for the value of certain materials and labor furnished and performed upon the building. The demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend and judgment of dismissal followed. The legal difficulties of the case arise out of the fact that the contractor's bond for the benefit of materialmen and laborers, is on the form of bond ordinarily used by surety companies on public works, and contains the following provision: " * * * Provided that any and all claims hereunder shall be filed and proceedings had in connection herewith as required by the provisions of the Act of Legislature of the State of California designated as chapter 303 of the statutes of 1919, approved May 10th, 1919, and any amendments thereof." The act referred to is the Public Works Act of 1919, and requires the filing of a verified statement of the claim with the board of trustees, supervisors, etc., or other board by which such contract was awarded, "at any time prior to the expiration of the period within which claims of lien must be filed for record, as prescribed by the provisions of section one thousand one hundred eighty-seven of the Code of Civil Procedure," and further provides that "at any time within 90 days following the expiration of the period last mentioned, the person, [etc.] filing the same may commence an action against the surety or sureties on the bond." Section 2.

[1, 2] The surety and the contractor had a legal right to make any bond, acceptable to the owner, they saw fit so to do, and the surety cannot be held beyond the express terms of that bond. If the bond as given did not meet the requirements of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as that section read on April 7, 1925 (date of bond), the only penalty was that the materialmen, etc., could have liens upon the property of the owner irrespective of contract price.

The demurrer in this case is founded upon three specific objections, to wit: (1) That plaintiff did not file "his claim in the office of the county recorder as required by the provisions of the Act of Legislature as set forth in said bond"; (2) that plaintiff's claim was filed only with the contractor, and "that no other or further proceedings were had by plaintiff in accordance with the Act of Legislature set forth in the bond"; and (3) "that said complaint was not filed within the time prescribed by section 1190, Code of Civil Procedure."

[3] As to point 1 of the demurrer, we have read the Public Works Act and find no requirement therein for filing or recording any claim or mechanic's lien in the office of the county recorder. The mechanics' lien laws do not require the recording of a claim of lien as a prerequisite to suit on the bond. Fraters, etc., Co. v. Southwestern, etc., Co., 200 Cal. 688, 254 P. 1097.

[4] As to point 2 the requirement of the bond as to filing a verified statement with the board, etc., of a public corporation by which the contract was awarded was impossible of performance, for the reason that this is a private work. Respondent contends that such claim should have been filed with the owner, but we cannot agree with this contention. No act was required as a substitute for the impossible as regards such filing of a verified claim.

[5] As to point 3, section 1190 of the Code of Civil Procedure, requiring suit to be commenced within ninety days after filing of lien, has no application to this case. That section has reference to liens of mechanics, etc., on real property, and not to a suit on a contractor's bond.

[6] Plaintiff has attempted to found his cause of action also upon the contractor's completion bond to owner. This contention cannot be sustained, for the reason that by its own terms said bond is limited only to the owner, to wit: "No right of action shall accrue under this bond to or for the use of any person other than the said * * * (owner)." Terry v. Southwestern Bldg. Co., 43 Cal. App. 366, 185 P. 212.

We conclude, therefore, that the demurrer as filed should have been overruled upon each and all of the three grounds presented therein.

The judgment is reversed, and the case is remanded to the trial court, with direction that the demurrer be overruled.

By an order duly issued and served, petitioner Blodgett was cited to appear before respondent court, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court, for having willfully and knowingly filed with the clerk of said court a certain document styled "Points and Authorities," in an action then pending in the court. This order to show cause was made by Hon. Frank C. Collier, at that time acting as a judge of said court. In response to the citation, the said Blodgett, who was plaintiff in said action, filed an answer wherein he alleged that "the Honorable Frank C. Collier is so greatly incensed against this plaintiff that it would be impossible to have a fair and impartial hearing of the issues of law and fact in the contempt proceedings instituted by the said Frank C. Collier in the above-entitled action on the 16th day of December, 1929; that said feeling against this plaintiff in the above-entitled action was occasioned by the receipt of a letter by the said Frank C. Collier on the 14th day of December, 1929, a copy of which letter is attached hereto marked 'Exhibit A.'" The copy of letter was attached to the answer, which was duly verified. Nevertheless, the court and the said judge acting therein and ignoring the objections stated in said answer proceeded to hear and determine the contempt proceeding, found Blodgett guilty of contempt of court, and imposed upon him a sentence of punishment therefor. Immediately thereafter the petition for writ of review herein was filed. The preceding statement of facts is supported by the record as shown in the return of the writ.

In this proceeding it is not necessary for us to pass upon the merits of the contempt proceeding. The sole question involved herein relates to the authority of Judge Collier, to act in the matter, and the jurisdiction of the Superior Court to act through said judge while the matter was in the condition shown by the record.

Section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in the year 1929 (St. 1929, p. 957), prescribes in much detail the procedure to be followed, where it is claimed that by reason of bias or prejudice of a judge a fair and impartial trial cannot be had before him:

"170. No justice, judge or justice of the peace shall sit or act as such in any action or proceeding: * * *

"5. When it is made to appear probable that, by reason of bias or prejudice of such justice, judge, or justice of the peace a fair and impartial trial cannot be had before him.

"Whenever a judge of a court of record shall have knowledge of any fact or facts which, under the provisions of this section, disqualify him to sit or act as such in any action or proceeding pending before him, it shall be his duty to declare the same in open court and cause a memorandum thereof to be entered in the minutes. * * *

"Whenever a judge of a court of record who shall be disqualified under the provisions of this section, to sit or act as such in any action or proceeding pending before him, neglects or fails to declare his disqualification in the manner hereinbefore provided, any party to such action or proceeding who has appeared therein may present to the court and file with the clerk a written statement objecting to the hearing of such matter or the trial of any issue of fact or law in such action or proceeding before such judge, and setting forth the fact or facts constituting the ground of the disqualification of such judge."

Immediately following the language above quoted the section contains provisions under which the judge may either consent to trial of the action or proceeding before another judge, or may file his answer to the allegations made by the objecting party. The section then proceeds as follows:

"No judge of a court of record, who shall deny his disqualification, shall hear or pass upon the question of his own disqualification; but in every such case, the question of the judge's disqualification shall be heard and determined by some other judge agreed upon by the parties who shall have appeared in the action or proceeding, or, in the event of their failing to agree, by a judge requested to act by the chairman of the judicial council. * * * Provision is further made for the selection of another judge to hear the action or proceeding when the disqualification of the first judge has been established, or when the judge has consented that the matter be tried before another judge.

[1] We are of the opinion that the provisions of law concerning the right of a party to have the trial of an action or proceeding transferred from a disqualified judge to another judge not so disqualified are applicable to contempt proceedings. The decisions upon which respondent relies in relation to this question were made prior to the enactment of the amended section 170, Code of Civil Procedure, containing the provisions hereinabove stated.

[2] The next contention of respondent is that courts have inherent power to punish for contempt, which power cannot be abridged by statute. This rule is well supported by authority. Lamberson v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 458, 91 P. 100, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619; In re Shortridge, 99 Cal. 526, 34 P. 227, 21 L. R. A. 755, 37 Am. St. Rep. 78; Paddon v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. App. 34, 223 P. 91. But it is further true, and is so affirmed in all of the above-cited cases, that the Legislature may regulate the procedure to be followed in contempt proceedings.

[3] The provisions of section 170, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended by the statute of 1929, supra, do not in the slightest degree abridge the power of respondent court to punish petitioner for any contempt committed by him. If upon a hearing before a qualified judge, of petitioner's challenge to the qualifications of Judge Collier to hear the contempt proceeding, it shall be determined that Judge Collier is not disqualified, he may then proceed to hear and determine the merits of the contempt proceeding. If, on the other hand, it be determined that Judge Collier is disqualified, the power of the court remains unimpaired to hear and determine said contempt proceeding through the agency of another judge. The order now under review is void, not because the court is without jurisdiction, but because in the present status of the proceeding Judge Collier is without authority to hear and determine the merits thereof.

The order is annulled, and the entire subject-matter of said contempt proceeding is remanded to respondent court for further action in conformity with this decision.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

104 Cal. App. 586
PEOPLE v. CARRILLO.
Cr. 22.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 19, 1930.

1. Criminal law § 823(9) — Instructions — Presumption of innocence — Cure of error.

Instruction that presumption of innocence rule is not intended to aid guilty to escape held not prejudicial, considered with other instructions (Pen. Code, § 1096).

The entire instruction, of which the language complained of was only a part, was to effect that rule which clothes every person accused of crime with presumption of innocence and imposes upon state burden of establishing his guilt beyond reasonable doubt is not intended to aid anyone to escape who is in fact guilty of crime, but it is a humane provision of law, intended, so far as human agency can, to guard against danger of any innocent person being unjustly punished. The court also gave an instruction charging in accordance with Pen. Code, § 1096, and a number of other instructions on this subject.

2. Homicide § 309(1) — Instruction — Provocation — Manslaughter.

Instruction regarding circumstances sufficient to reduce offense of murder to manslaughter, and as to what is adequate provocation, held to properly state law.

One of the instructions was to effect that when mortal blow, though unlawful, is struck in heat of passion, excited by sudden quarrel, and of sufficient violence to amount to adequate provocation, law will disregard actual intent and will reduce offense to manslaughter, and the other instruction was to effect that, if intent exists and killing is unlawful, it will be murder even though done upon sudden quarrel or heat of passion, unless there was adequate provocation, and that neither provocation by words only, or insulting actions, or gestures, without an assault upon the person, nor any trespass, are of themselves sufficient to reduce offense of intentional homicide with deadly weapon from murder to manslaughter.

3. Criminal law Ⓒ1144(14) — Instructions — Repeating — Presumption on appeal.

Appellate court must presume court had good reason for repeating instruction, absent showing to contrary.

4. Criminal law Ⓒ823(17) — Instructions — Repeating — Error cured.

Repeating instructions regarding what provocation was not sufficient to reduce offense from murder to manslaughter, if error, held cured by other instructions.

The court instructed the jury that the fact that a proposition of law was repeated in instructions did not make it any more important than any other proposition, and that jury were to disregard any expression or inference therefrom that might seem to indicate an opinion about facts on part of court, and that the question of guilt or innocence of defendant was for jury alone.

5. Criminal law Ⓒ763, 764(10) — Instruction — Intention — Dangerous weapon — Suggesting facts.

Instruction presumption is that one assaulting with dangerous weapon intended death, following paragraph that in determining intention jury should consider means used held not to make suggestion regarding facts (Pen. Code, § 21).

The entire instruction, of which language complained of was part, was to effect that in determining intention of defendant, it was important to consider means used to accomplish killing, and that a person must be presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily does and must also be presumed to intend all natural, probable, and usual consequences of his own acts, and that, therefore, when one person assails another violently with dangerous weapon, likely to kill, and which does in fact destroy life, natural presumption is that such assailant intended death.

6. Criminal law Ⓒ863(1) — Instructions — Self-defense — Rereading — Court's reluctance.

In murder prosecution, court's reluctance to reread instructions regarding self-defense at jury's request held not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Frank Carrillo was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Edgar B. Hervey, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., Stephen Connell, Dist. Atty., and Ernest N. Clark, Deputy Dist. Atty., all of San Diego, for the People.

BARNARD, J.

The defendant was charged with the murder of one Pedro M. Badillo, and was convicted of murder in the second degree. This appeal is from the judgment upon the verdict, and from an order of the court denying a motion for a new trial.

The evidence shows that the Carrillo and Badillo families lived in adjoining houses at Palm City, in San Diego county; that certain differences had arisen between the wife of defendant and the wife and daughter of the deceased; that Mrs. Carrillo had complained to her husband concerning the manner in which she was treated by the Badillo family; and that the defendant had on several occasions talked with the deceased in reference to the situation.

The defendant testified that on the morning of the day of the shooting he went to a nearby store to get some provisions and met Badillo; that they had some talk about the difficulty between the two families; that as they were parting Badillo showed defendant a gun and threatened to break the gun over his head; that when defendant returned to his home he saw Badillo lying on the front porch of his own house; that defendant went upstairs and got his gun; that he went out on the front porch of his house, and then could see Badillo reclining on his own porch, with his wife and daughter sitting near him; that from his front yard he spoke to Badillo in regard to this dispute; that Badillo asked him to come over to his house, but he replied he had no business in his house; that he walked through the front gate and over to a telephone pole that was approximately on a line between the two places; that Badillo entered his house and came out a few minutes later with a gun stuck in his trousers; that Badillo walked out to where defendant was standing; that after a little discussion Badillo said: "What my daughter say is the truth." The defendant replied "anybody says so is a liar" and that after a little more discussion, both drew their guns and began to fire. Mrs. Jones, a disinterested witness, testified that she saw the defendant draw a pistol and fire immediately, and that he fired before Badillo did; that the deceased backed away and went clear across his lot on the adjoining lot, and that the defendant followed the deceased and continued shooting. A number of shots were fired by both parties during the time Badillo was retreating, and the testimony of the autopsy surgeon indicates that he was instantly killed by the last shot.

The defense contended that the deceased was the first to draw his weapon and fire, and that the defendant fired only in self-defense. While the jury has, by its verdict, found to the contrary, it is argued that the evidence upon which they so found is so unsatisfactory and so far from convincing that the issue might well have been determined the other way, and therefore, that even the slightest expression from the court, or the slightest attitude manifested by the court toward the theory of the defense, became so important, under the circumstances, as to constitute reversible error. The appellant does not attack the sufficiency of the evidence, other than making the claim just mentioned. He sets forth four assignments of error, all in connection with instructions given, or the manner in which they were given. While we do not regard the evidence as not convincing, or as being in the least unsatisfactory, we have given careful consideration to the points raised.

[1] The first objection is, that after the court had instructed the jury as to the doctrine of reasonable doubt, and the presumption of innocence, it then instructed them as follows: "The rule of law which clothes every person accused of crime with the presumption of innocence and imposes upon the state the burden of establishing his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, is not intended to aid anyone to escape, who is, in fact, guilty of crime." It is argued that the court, after correctly instructing the jury upon these rules of law, thus used argumentative and persuasive language, which had a tendency to minimize to the jury the importance of these rules; that this had a tendency to suggest to the jury that this particular case was one where caution should be exercised in applying said rules of law; and that this even suggested to the jury the belief on the part of the court that the defendant was guilty. The entire instruction, of which the language complained of was only a part, is as follows:

"The rule of law which clothes every person accused of crime with the presumption of innocence, and imposes upon the state the burden of establishing his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, is not intended to aid any one to escape who is in fact guilty of crime. But it is a humane provision of the law, intended, so far as human agency can, to guard against the danger of any innocent person being unjustly punished."

Appellant has not complied with rule 8 of the rules governing this court, which provides for the setting forth of all other instructions given upon a certain subject, when one instruction upon that subject is claimed to be erroneous. However, the record shows that the court gave an instruction substantially in accordance with section 1096 of the Penal Code, and, in addition, gave a number of other instructions frequently given on this subject in the past, and which are not attacked by appellant. While complaint is made of the first portion of this instruction, it is but the complement of the second portion, which expressly tells the jury that the purpose of these rules of law is to prevent an innocent person being punished, and the entire instruction could not mislead the jury, and is not prejudicial to the defendant. All of the instructions, taken together, show that the jury was fully and properly instructed on the question of reasonable doubt and presumption of innocence.

[2-4] The second instruction complained of is as follows:

"But if the intent exists and the killing is unlawful, it will be murder, even though done upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, unless there was adequate provocation. In considering what is regarded as such adequate provocation, it is a settled rule in law that neither provocation by words only, however opprobrious, or contemptuous, or insulting actions, or gestures, without an assault, upon the person, nor any trespass against land or goods, are of themselves sufficient to reduce the offense of an intentional homicide with a deadly weapon from murder to manslaughter."

After reading this instruction the court said: "I think I will read that last paragraph again," after which the instruction was repeated. Appellant contends that if the jury was satisfied that the defendant had not acted in self-defense, they might still have believed that the killing was done in the heat of passion, upon a sudden quarrel and upon adequate provocation, and have reduced the offense to manslaughter, and that the effect of repeating this instruction was to suggest to the jury that, in the court's opinion, no adequate provocation had been shown in this case. This instruction was preceded by the following instruction:

"And when the mortal blow, though unlawful, is struck in the heat of passion, excited by a sudden quarrel, and of sufficient violence to amount to adequate provocation, the law, out of forbearance for the weakness of human nature, will disregard the actual intent, and will reduce the offense to manslaughter. In such case, although the intent to kill exists, it is not that deliberate and malicious intent which is an essential element in the crime of murder."

These instructions did not go to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but to the degree of the crime, and they properly stated the law. People v. Turley, 50 Cal. 469; People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 358, 117 P. 176. The jury was fully instructed as to the definition of murder in the first degree, murder in the second degree, and manslaughter, with appropriate definitions and the distinguishing characteristics of each. There is nothing in the record to show that the rereading of the instruction was done for the purpose of emphasis, and the same may well have occurred because of some disturbance, or other condition that made it doubtful whether the jury had heard it. In the absence of anything to show the contrary, it must be presumed that the court had good reason for its action, and the inference cannot be drawn that the court's purpose in rereading the instruction was to give undue emphasis to the same. Furthermore, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"In preparing these lengthy instructions there is more or less repetition of the same thing. I have tried to avoid that as much as possible, but it does not seem to be possible, and so, as I say, you will find or perhaps have already observed and will have observed in discussing that matter that some propositions of law have been repeated and others have not. That should not have any significance whatever. These instructions that have been repeated have been so repeated by mistake, and so the mere fact that one or more instructions has or have been repeated should have no weight with you whatever. If the proposition of law is stated once, that is sufficient, and if the same thing is said five or six times that does not make this any more important than any other because of its having been repeated."

The court also fully instructed the jury that they were to disregard any expression, or inference therefrom, that might seem to indicate an opinion about the facts, on the part of the court, and that the question of the guilt or innocence of the defendant was for the jury alone. If any error could be inferred from the mere fact that the record shows this instruction was repeated, this was cured by these other instructions.

[5] Error is next claimed in that the court gave the following instruction:

"Therefore, when one person assails another violently with a dangerous weapon, likely to kill, and it does in fact, destroy the life of the party assailed, the natural presumption is that such assailant intended death, or other great bodily harm, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, this presumption must prevail," which is stated to have been in a paragraph which immediately followed a paragraph in which appeared the following: "In determining the intention of the defendant at the time of the transaction complained of, it is important to consider the means used to accomplish the killing."

The claim is made that, in thus placing the two statements in such proximity, the court was suggesting to the jury that, in fact, the defendant here had assailed the deceased; that the natural presumption was that the defendant intended to kill Badillo; and that there was no evidence to the contrary. This contention is without merit. The entire instruction, parts of which are complained of, is as follows:

"In determining the intention of the defendant at the time of the transaction complained of, it is important to consider the means used to accomplish the killing. The intent or intention is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense, and the sound mind and discretion of the accused. All persons are of sound mind who are neither idiots, nor lunatics, nor affected with insanity."

"A person must be presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily and willfully does in fact do, and must also be presumed to intend all the natural, probable and usual consequences of his own acts. Therefore when one person assails another violently with a dangerous weapon, likely to kill, and which does in fact destroy the life of the party assailed, the natural presumption is that such assailant intended death, or other great bodily harm, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary this presumption must prevail."

The instruction, as given, properly states the law. People v. Jones, supra; Pen. Code, § 21. It contains no suggestion on the part of the court, as to the facts.

[6] The last assignment of error is in connection with the alleged reluctance of the court to reread certain instructions concerning self-defense, which were requested by the jury. After the jury had retired to deliberate upon their verdict, they returned into court requesting that further instructions be given them, defining first degree murder, second degree murder, and manslaughter. The court thereupon repeated those portions of his instructions previously given, containing the definitions requested by the jury. Thereafter a juror stated: "Some of the members of the jury have asked that the Court give us further instructions as to the plea of self-defense, and of the legal meaning of the term 'malice.'" The attorneys stipulated that those additional instructions might be given, whereupon the court said: "Of course, the whole thing is—I can give the definition of the term 'malice,' which is right before me here, but so far as self-defense is concerned that is in every part of the instructions; so I would probably have to read the whole instructions." After a few more statements, between both counsel and the court, the court stated: "Well, I think that it would not serve any useful purpose to have all of the instructions on self-defense read over again, because that constitutes a large proportion, and run through the whole instructions bearing on that question. Some of them were presented by the defendant's counsel and some of them presented by the People's counsel." Defendant's attorney then noted an exception to the refusal of the court to reread those instructions to the jury. The court then replied in part, as follows: "Well, I am inclined to be accommodating, but I think that in view of the situation I will not give all the instructions over again." After then repeating instructions on malice, the court then said: "And I think that is all I will repeat here now, because of course the jury has had all of this and it is just a question of whether it would be in any way to advantage to go over it all again, which would take me a long time." Upon counsel for defendant again insisting that instructions on self-defense be reread, the court indicated that it was his understanding that the jury desired further explanations upon the subject of defense, more specific than the ones previously given. A juror then stated that what was desired was the rereading of those portions of the court's instructions which relate to self-defense. The court then replied: "If all of you want those instructions read here on self-defense, of course, it would take an hour or so, so I will stay here and give it, if that is the wish of all the jurors." In reply to a question by the court, as to the exact request of the jury, a juror replied: "Yes, the jury asked me, as foreman of the jury, to request the Court to read again that portion of his instructions with reference to self-defense. Not the entire instructions, but that portion of the instructions that cover self-defense." The court then replied: "Well, I don't know whether I can find those or not. Possibly we better come back here after the bailiff has taken the jury out to dinner. In the meanwhile, I can sort out those that relate to self-defense, so that if all the jurors want that done, I will give that. Of course it was not requested originally, but it is possible that I can sort out the most of these." Thereafter, the court repeated the instructions theretofore given, upon the subject of self-defense. The argument is made that, in view of the promptness with which the court repeated the instructions requested as to the definition of first degree murder, second degree murder, and manslaughter, his apparent reluctance to instruct the jury upon the subject of self-defense could only be taken by the jury as an indication that the court felt those instructions were of relatively little importance, and that this had the effect of minimizing their importance in the minds of the jurors. And, further, that the court thus disclosed to the jury that his reluctance to give the instructions in question was because they had been prepared by defendant's counsel. It is insisted that this was an indication to the jury of the opinion of the court upon the evidence and the guilt of the defendant, and that the same was prejudicial to him.

The instructions given by the court were somewhat lengthy, taking up more than thirty closely written pages in the reporter's transcript. There were a number of instructions relating to self-defense, and these were interspersed through the other instructions. We have carefully read this portion of the transcript, and find nothing therein to indicate that the reluctance of the court to read these particular instructions again was occasioned by anything other than a feeling on the part of the court that it would take too long to segregate them, and possibly a desire to avoid the difficulty of rereading such instructions without repeating a number of other instructions, with which they were interwoven. We feel there is nothing in the record to show that the court considered them unimportant, and that the court's action in this regard did not indicate to the jury the court's opinion as to whether or not self-defense had been proved. Under the circumstances, the instructions in question should have been reread to the jury, and in our opinion the error that otherwise would have appeared was cured when they were again read to the jury by the court. The court also instructed the jury as follows:

"I have not expressed or intended to express, nor have I intimated or intended to intimate, any opinion as to what facts have been established or what inference should be drawn from the evidence adduced, and if any expression of mine seems to indicate an opinion relating to any of these matters, such opinion you must entirely disregard."

"The court instructs the jury that rulings have been made by the court in your presence, and questions may have been asked of witnesses by the court. From such occurrences, or from anything that has occurred in the trial, you are not to infer what the opinion of the court may be as to the guilt or innocence of the accused."

The matter of self-defense was fully and completely covered in the instructions of the court, and the matters here complained of could not have misled the jury.

No reversible errors appearing, the order and judgment are affirmed.

PALMER et al. v. FIX et al.★

Civ. 3980.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 19, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 18, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 15, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1071(5) — Harmless error — Finding — Judgment otherwise supported.

That finding of account stated was erroneous does not require reversal where judgment was supported, in view of other findings and stipulation.

2. Trial ⇨404(2) — Findings — Conclusions of law — Construction — Cancellation of contracts.

Findings that plaintiff canceled contract because of defendants' violation thereof, and that defendants were not entitled to commissions, constituted findings of fact as distinguished from conclusions of law.

3. Contracts ⇨322(3) — Advertising — Breach — Evidence — Sufficiency.

Evidence justified finding of breach by distributors of contract to advertise and sell plaintiff's product, and that distributors were not entitled to commissions after plaintiff's cancellation.

The contract required that all advertising and sales talks must be censored by plaintiff. The evidence disclosed that this provision was not complied with, and that in many instances the advertisements were so framed as to give the impression that defendants, who were financially interested in a competing machine, were the manufacturers.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1) — Review — Finding — Conflicting evidence.

Reviewing court may not interfere with trial court's finding on conflicting evidence.

5. Contracts ⇨171(1) — "Entire contract."

Contract is entire when it is contemplated that all its parts shall be interdependent; "entire contract."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Entire Contract," see Words and Phrases.]

6. Contracts ⇨171(1) — "Severable contract."

"Severable contract" is one susceptible of division and apportionment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Severable Contract," see Words and Phrases.]

7. Contracts ⇨171(1) — Entire or severable — Construction — Intention.

Whether contract is entire or severable is determined according to intention of parties upon considering all circumstances.

8. Contracts ⇨171(1) — Advertising contract — Severable covenant — Censorship.

Provision in contract appointing distributors for manufacturer's product to advertise, solicit, and sell product for commissions as exclusive agents, that all advertising must be submitted to manufacturer for censoring, held not independent covenant severable from other provisions.

9. Arbitration and award ⇨8 — Agreement — Court — Jurisdiction.

Generally, agreement between parties to submit to arbitration will not prevent court from assuming jurisdiction.

10. Arbitration and award ⇨7 — Construction — Attitude of courts.

Principle that courts favor arbitrations is generally limited to proceedings which have resulted in award.

11. Contracts ⇨284(2) — Agreement to arbitrate — Action — Condition precedent.

No action can be brought before arbitration where contract provides that decision of arbitrators on certain questions shall be condition precedent to right of action.

12. Contracts ⇨284(2) — Advertising contract — Agreement to arbitrate — Action — Condition precedent.

Provision in contract appointing distributors to advertise and sell manufacturer's product, requiring arbitration as to diligence of distributors, did not prevent manufacturer from suing for breach of agreement to submit advertising for manufacturer's approval.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter S. Gates, Judge.

Action by Fred Palmer and others, copartners, doing business under the name of the Torrance Perforating Company, and by the Watson Perforating Company against M. J. Fix and H. S. Plunkett, individually and as copartners doing business under the name of the Watson Pipe and Supply Company, and another, in which defendants named filed a cross-action. From a judgment for the Watson Perforating Company, the defendants named appeal.

Affirmed.

John A. Jorgenson, C. H. Tyler, and Charles H. Sherrick, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Verge & Cooney, Arthur C. Verge, and Harold F. Collins, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiffs brought this action to recover from the defendants the sum of $3,571.88, together with interest and costs of suit. The complaint sets forth three causes of action. The first one alleges the common count for money; the second one is upon an account stated; the third one for money had and received to the use of the plaintiffs. The defendants answered, denied the indebtedness, and, by way of a cross-complaint, stated a cause of action against the defendants for an accounting based upon a contract of agency between the parties, whereby the cross-complainants claimed there was due them the sum of $30,000. The cross-defendants denied the indebtedness. Upon the issues thus framed, the cause was tried. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were made and filed, and, in accordance therewith, judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff Watson Perforating Company and against the defendants M. J. Fix and H. S. Plunkett, copartners doing business under the name of Watson Pipe and Supply Company, in the sum of $3,571.88, together with costs. The action upon the cross-complaint was dismissed. The defendants and cross-complainants appeal from the whole of said judgment.

[1] The appellants claim that the finding of the trial court that there was an account stated between the parties is without support in the evidence, and therefore constitutes such prejudicial error as to require a reversal of the judgment. At the outset of the trial, it was stipulated by the parties that the defendants had in their possession $3,571.88, as alleged in the complaint, subject to the amount claimed by the defendants, as alleged in their cross-complaint. The court found that defendants were not entitled to recover on their cross-complaint; therefore, under the admission, as aforesaid, the court was justified in finding in favor of the plaintiff. Another complete answer to the foregoing claim is that, in addition to the cause of action upon an account stated, there is also a cause of action based on a common count for money, and another for money had and received to the use of plaintiff, either one of which measures up to the admission of the defendants as to the amount due plaintiffs. In 24 California Jurisprudence, page 1000, § 221, it is said: "If a judgment is fully supported by, and rests upon valid findings, it may not be set aside because not supported by other findings, which may be ignored as being immaterial. * * *" The same rule is stated in Miller & Lux v. Secara, 193 Cal. 755, 227 P. 171, 177, where the court held: "The finding of the trial court that plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the provisions of sections 68, 69, and 72 of the act was predicated upon an erroneous conclusion of law; but, as this finding is in no way essential to support the judgment, the error is immaterial." It follows that, even though the finding of an account stated is erroneous, the finding becomes immaterial, and is not necessary to support the judgment.

[2] The next assignment of error is that the findings of fact do not support the judgment. It is claimed that a part of finding nine, all of ten, and a part of eleven are mere conclusions of law. The portion of finding nine to which appellant objects is to the effect that on March 28, 1925, plaintiffs canceled the sales contract between themselves and the defendants "because of its violation by defendants and cross-complainants," and finding ten, "That it is not true that the plaintiffs and cross-defendants have failed and refused to pay the defendants and cross-plaintiffs any commissions due the defendants and cross-plaintiffs, in the manner provided in the said contract." That part of finding eleven objected to reads as follows: "That said defendants and cross-plaintiffs are not entitled to any commission on the sale of any goods, wares or merchandise of the plaintiffs or cross-defendants, after the said 28th day of March, 1925." In Weidenmueller v. Stearns, etc., Co., 128 Cal. 623, 61 P. 374, it was claimed that the following finding of fact was a conclusion of law: "That plaintiff had no prescriptive or other right to receive water from said canal at any other level than the bottom of the canal." This was held to be a proper finding of fact. In passing upon the distinction between a finding of fact and a conclusion of law, in the case last cited, it is said, (citing from Levins v. Rovegno, 71 Cal. 275 [12 P. 161]): "The line of demarkation between what are questions of fact and conclusions of law is not one easy to be drawn in all cases. * * * If, from the facts in evidence, the result can be reached by that process of natural reasoning adopted in the investigation of truth, it becomes an ultimate fact, to be found as such. If, on the other hand, resort must be had to the artificial processes of the law in order to reach final determination, the result is a conclusion of law." The following have been held to be findings of fact: "That plaintiff did not rescind said sales." Hollenbach v. Schnabel, 101 Cal. 317, 35 P. 872, 40 Am. St. Rep. 57. "That plaintiff was not the owner." Daly v. Sorocco, 80 Cal. 368, 22 P. 211. "That Elizabeth Zink has no right, title, interest, claim, or lien of, in, or to or against any of the land or premises." Dam v. Zink, 112 Cal. 93, 44 P. 331. In the latter case it is said that it was not necessary for the court to state certain facts "as a reason for finding the issue as to the lien against the appellant." In this case it was not necessary for the court to give its reason for finding that plaintiff had no prescriptive or other right to receive water from any other level than the bottom of the canal. The evidence given at the trial furnished the reasons for the ultimate finding. * * * In the case at bar, the court found that the contract was canceled "because of its violation by defendants and cross-complainants." Under the decisions above cited, it was not necessary that the court state in the findings the reason for such cancellation, it being an ultimate fact found by the court. The same rule applies with equal force to the objections to findings ten and eleven. Furthermore, in Butler v. Agnes, 9 Cal. App. 327, 330, 99 P. 395, it is held that in case of a doubt as to which class the findings belong, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the judgment. The findings in the instant case support the judgment.

[3,4] It is further contended that the findings are not supported by the evidence. The contract provides in part: "That in consideration of the agreement of said second party (defendants) to advertise, solicit and sell the products of said first parties (plaintiffs), to-wit: cone screen casing, straight drilled screen casing, and other products which the first parties may from time to time manufacture, the first said parties do hereby appoint the said second parties as California distributors, with power to advertise, solicit and sell their products under the conditions herein stated, to-wit:" Then follows a statement of the conditions, among them, that the second parties are the general and exclusive agents, the latter to use due diligence in advertising and making sales of said products personally and by subagents. It also provides that: "All advertising and sales talks must be censored and O. K'd by said first parties." The evidence discloses that the provisions of the contract for submitting advertising matter to the first parties for approval were not complied with. It further appears that in many instances the products of the plaintiffs were not advertised as the products of plaintiffs. The advertisements in many instances were so framed that the impression was left upon the mind of the reader that the defendants were the manufacturers and not the distributors of plaintiff's products, the name of the plaintiff company and the word "distributors" being omitted from many of the advertisements.

It further appears from the record that appellants were financially interested in a machine being built that would be competitive to the machine owned by the respondents. It also appears that the plaintiffs demanded many times that the advertising be submitted to them for censoring, as required by the contract, and that there were many disputes over the method of advertising under the contract. At one time the plaintiff Grau stated to one of the appellants: "You are advertising yourself and we are being strangled to death as far as business is concerned * * * and it won't be long before you will have us where we can't do anything, * * * and we will be up the river if you fellows don't snap out of it." On March 28, 1925, the plaintiffs canceled the contract, and thereafter brought this action to recover the balance alleged to be due them for the amount collected by the defendants from sales of goods made by them prior to the cancellation of said contract. The defendants by cross-complaint, alleged a cause of action for commission due them on sales made after the said cancellation, and prior to the day the contract expired, according to its terms.

It is true that the foregoing statement rests upon a sharp conflict, in the evidence, but, nevertheless, it was the duty of the trial court to pass upon the conflict, and, having resolved it in favor of the plaintiffs, this court may not interfere.

[5-8] It is another contention of appellants that conceding a breach of the covenant to submit to plaintiffs the advertising for censoring, such covenant is an independent one and subsidiary and subservient to the primary and substantial promises of the contract. The contract provides that appellants are to advertise, solicit, and sell the products manufactured by respondents, as their exclusive agents, and said agents are to use due diligence in advertising and making sales of said products, personally and by subagents, for which they receive a certain percentage of the price received from all sales. "All advertising and sales talks must be censored and O. K'd by said first parties."

In passing upon the question of what constitutes entire and severable contracts, the following general rules are applicable: An entire contract is defined in 13 Cor. Jur. p. 561, as follows: "As a general rule, it may be said that a contract is entire when by its terms, nature and purpose it contemplates and intends that each and all of its parts and the consideration shall be common each to the other and interdependent." A severable contract is defined in 13 Cor. Jur. p. 561, in the following language: "One which in its nature and purpose is susceptible of division and apportionment." In Mahana v. Los Angeles E. & M. Co., 82 Cal. App. 710, 714, 256 P. 279, it is held that the line of demarcation between entire and severable contracts has been definitely drawn in this state, and it is a question of interpretation to be determined according to the intention of the parties upon consideration of all the circumstances. The same rule is laid down in Sterling v. Gregory, 149 Cal. 117, 85 P. 305; L. A. Gas & Electric Co. v. Amalgamated Oil Co., 156 Cal. 776, 106 P. 55. In the light of these authorities, the contract now before the court provides that advertising is one of its principal features, and it also provides that defendants must submit the advertising to plaintiffs for censoring. That this latter provision was an important part of the contract appears from the evidence, which shows that the defendants, by their failure to submit the advertising to the plaintiffs for censoring, were enabled to advertise the products as their own. In some instances they omitted the word "distributor," thereby making the advertisement appear that the goods were their own product; at another time advertising themselves as the manufacturers. Furthermore, for their services as such agents, they were to receive a fixed compensation as a whole. We are of the opinion that the contract is an entire one.

[9-11] There is a provision in the contract that if the parties "cannot agree as to the diligence of the second parties, copartners, to live up to and perform their said agreements to well and reasonably advertise the said products, and to push the sale of said products, then the matter shall be submitted to arbitration. * * *" Provisions are then made for the appointment and selection of arbitrators and that a majority shall decide the issue, and the decision shall be final. If they decide in favor of the contentions of the first party, then they shall be at liberty to appoint another distributor. If the decision is in favor of the second parties, then the plaintiffs cannot again compel a resubmission of the same question for three months. Plaintiffs commenced this action without invoking the above provision of the contract for arbitration. The complaint in this case was filed in the superior court of Los Angeles county, July 20, 1925; the cause was tried March 27, 1927, and judgment entered October 10, 1927. The Legislature of the state of California amended the provisions of the law relative to the right of arbitration, effective July 27, 1927. The following decision of the question of arbitration here invoked is based upon the code provisions and decisions of the court as they were prior to said amendments. It is our conclusion that said amendments are not retroactive, but, if so construed, section 1284 of the Code of Civil Procedure has not been followed. It is therein provided that in a pending action, where provision is made for arbitration, if the application is made therefor, and the court is satisfied that it is a proper case for arbitration, the court must stay the proceeding pending arbitration. No such application was made. It is claimed by the appellants that respondents' remedy was to arbitrate in accordance with the terms of the contract. It is a general rule that an agreement between parties to submit a dispute to arbitration will be disregarded by the courts, and they will take jurisdiction and determine a dispute between the parties, notwithstanding such an agreement. North American Co. v. Outer Harbor Co., 178 Cal. 406, 173 P. 756. This general rule is based upon the principle that "parties will not be permitted, by agreements to submit to arbitration, to oust the jurisdiction of the courts, whether the agreement relates to existing differences or to those which may arise in the future. In other words, the courts may disregard such agreements, assume jurisdiction, and determine the matters in dispute which constitute the subject-matter of the agreements, on the principle that the parties cannot deprive themselves of the right to resort to the proper legal tribunals for the submission of their controversies. The general principle that courts favor arbitrations and will indulge every reasonable presumption to uphold arbitration proceedings is strictly limited to proceedings which have resulted in an award, in consequence of which submissions to arbitration cannot be specifically enforced, and the parties to the submission may revoke it at any time before the award is made." 5 Cor. Jur. p. 20; Blodgett Co. v. Bebe Co., 190 Cal. 665, 669, 214 P. 38, 40, 26 A. L. R. 1070. There is, however, an exception to this settled principle of law, that "Where a contract contains a stipulation, not that all questions arising thereunder, whether as to the validity or effect of such contract or otherwise, shall be submitted to arbitration, but that the decision of arbitrators on a certain question or questions, such as the quantity, quality, or price of materials or workmanship, the value of work, the amount of loss or damage, or the like, shall be a condition precedent to the right of action on the contract itself, no fixed sum being stated in the contract, such stipulation will be enforced, because the parties to a contract have a right to adopt whatever method they see fit for determining such questions, and until the method adopted has been pursued, or some sufficient reason given for not pursuing it, no action can be brought on the contract." Davison v. East Whittier Land & Water Co., 153 Cal. 81, 96 P. 88. This rule finds sanction in Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 307, 38 Am. Rep. 54; Blodgett Co. v. Bebe Co., supra.

[12] Under the above provision of the contract relating to arbitration, does the subject matter of the dispute between the parties come within the purview of the cases last above cited? The contract provides for arbitration as to the "diligence of the second parties, copartners, to live up to and perform their said agreements to well and reasonably advertise the said products and to push the sale of said products." From an analysis of the contract, there can be no question that advertising the products manufactured by the plaintiffs was a subject of first importance. The principal dispute between the parties was plaintiffs' right to censor the advertising, and thus pass upon the character of the advertising. The arbitration clause relates to the "diligence" of the second parties to advertise, and not to the character or quality thereof. Webster's International Dictionary defines "diligence" as: "Interested and persevering application; devoted and painstaking effort to accomplish what was undertaken; assiduity in service." Therefore, the clause to submit differences to arbitration does not relate to the submission of advertising to be censored, but to the effort and good faith with which the second parties performed their part of the contract. We are of the opinion that the plaintiffs were not required, under the terms of the agreement, to submit the case to arbitration.

Appellants have assigned eleven rulings of the trial court on objections to the admission or rejection of evidence adverse to the appellants, which they claim constitute reversible error. We have examined each ruling objected to, and are satisfied that none of them constitute reversible error. Section 4½, art. 6, Const.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GILLISPIE.

Cr. 23.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District.
California.

March 28, 1930.

1. Criminal law §1170(2) — Child stealing — Exclusion of testimony — Reversible error — Subsequent testimony.

Exclusion of question whether girl alleged to have been stolen talked to defendant about leaving home held not prejudicial error, where subsequently testified to.

2. Kidnapping §1 — Child stealing — Voluntary act — Offense against parent.

Whether girl accompanied defendant voluntarily is immaterial in offense of child stealing, which is offense against parent.

3. Kidnapping §5 — Child stealing — Fraudulent taking — Evidence.

Evidence that defendant charged with child stealing represented to girl's mother that he was taking daughter to party, but intended to run away with her, showed taking was fraudulent.

4. Kidnapping §5 — Child stealing — Intention to conceal — Evidence.

Admission by defendant charged with child stealing that action taken was planned and deception used showed intention to detain and conceal child.

5. Kidnapping §5 — Child stealing — Evidence — Conviction.

Conviction for child stealing held sustained (Pen. Code, § 21).

The defendant charged with child stealing represented to his stepmother that he was taking her fifteen year old daughter by former marriage to a party. The defendant surreptitiously returned to remove personal effects, and thereafter drove to another state during first two nights and married the girl under an assumed name, and subsequently took the girl to other states. The defendant testified that the trip and marriage had been planned before they started to the party.

6. Names §16(2) — Prior conviction — Names — idem sonans.

In determining whether defendant Gillispie was person previously convicted under record of sentence of one Gillespie, principle of idem sonans applies.

7. Criminal law §1202(3) — Prior conviction — Admission.

Admission by defendant to witness that he had served term in prison held sufficient to show prior conviction.

8. Criminal law §1202(3) — Prior conviction — Admission — Evidence.

Stepmother's statement that she knew defendant served in prison, together with defendant's admission that he was convicted and evidence that defendant was person convicted, sustained finding of prior conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; George R. Freeman, Judge.

James G. Gillispie was convicted of child stealing with two prior convictions of felony, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

W. E. Balcom, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

BARNARD, J.

The defendant was found guilty by a jury of the crime of child stealing, a felony, and the jury also found that he had suffered two prior convictions for felonies. This is an appeal from the judgment based upon the verdict, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

It appears from the record that the defendant, who is about twenty-eight years old, came, about May 2, 1929, to reside with his father and stepmother in the town of Elsinore, California. There were other children in the family, including a fifteen year old daughter of defendant's stepmother, by a former marriage. On May 21, 1929, defendant represented to his stepmother that a party was being given at Wildemar, a few miles away. With the permission of the stepmother, defendant left the home around 7 o'clock in the evening with the girl and her brother, ostensibly to attend this party. So far as the parents knew, they never returned until after the defendant was arrested. The defendant took the girl to the state of Nevada, where he married her under an assumed name. They then went into Utah and later into Oregon, where the defendant was arrested about a month after he left Elsinore. The mother testified that she did not hear from her daughter until some time in June, and that she had not consented to the daughter's going away with defendant, other than to attend this party. The evidence shows that instead of going to a party, they picked up another girl at Wildemar, and later in the evening returned home, secured their personal belongings without the knowledge of the parents, and departed. The evidence shows they proceeded at once into Nevada, traveling all night the first two nights; and that later they went to see certain relatives of the girl in Salt Lake City. The defendant testified that the trip and marriage had been planned before they started to the supposed party at Wildemar.

[1, 2] Appellant's first contention is that the trial court erred in sustaining an objection to a question asked of him on direct examination, "Did she ever talk to you about going away from home?" The argument is made that, if the girl accompanied appellant of her own volition, and not as a result of force, fraud, or enticement, this would constitute a defense to the charge of child stealing. Even if it be conceded that an answer to the question should have been permitted, the record shows that the appellant was later permitted to go into the matter fully and to narrate at length the circumstances under which the girl accompanied him. He was permitted to testify that he did not take the girl by force or use any fraud or deceit; that he did not try to persuade the girl to go with him; and that he did not endeavor to prevent her from returning to her mother. He was permitted to testify that he had heard the girl express a desire to leave home because she was not satisfied; and, further, that she was the one that desired to go away. In any event, it is immaterial whether the girl accompanied appellant voluntarily or not. People v. Torres, 48 Cal. App. 606, 192 P. 175; People v. Munos, 84 Cal. App. 6, 257 P. 549. The offense involved in such a charge is the offense against the parent and not that against the child.

Appellant's next objection is to the following portions of certain instructions:

"* * * That it is immaterial whether or not the said minor girl consented to such taking and went with the defendant freely and voluntarily and of her own accord, and you must not consider for any purpose of this action whether said girl went voluntarily or otherwise."

"It is, therefore, immaterial whether the children went voluntarily and requested that they be taken away."

The court gave very full and complete instructions to which no objection is made, except that the portions above quoted deprived the appellant of a defense to which he was entitled. There is no merit in this contention. People v. Torres, supra; People v. Munos, supra.

[3-5] Appellant next contends that there was no evidence to show that he maliciously, forcibly, or fraudulently took and enticed away the girl, or that he detained and concealed her. The evidence that appellant represented to the girl's mother that he was taking her daughter to a party, with his admission that his real intention was to run away with her, and that when they left it was not their intention to return, and that the trip had been planned in advance, is amply sufficient to show that the taking away was fraudulent. Appellant's admission that the action taken was planned in advance, with the deception used, is sufficient of itself to show the intention to detain and conceal. In addition to the deception practiced in order to get her away from the home, appellant's intentions are fully shown by his surreptitious return to remove their personal effects; by his driving all of the first two nights; by his taking the girl out of the state; by his marrying her under an assumed name; and by later taking her to two other states. All of the other surrounding circumstances furnish ample corroboration. Pen. Code, § 21; People v. Munos, supra.

Upon the issue of prior convictions, the prosecution introduced a certified copy of the record of the sentence of one James J. Gillespie, alias James Dorsey, to imprisonment in the State Prison at San Quentin, by the superior court of Imperial county, under date of August 29, 1921, upon the charge of destroying and injuring a jail. There was also introduced a certified copy of the proceedings upon the sentence of one James Gillespie to imprisonment in Folsom Penitentiary by the superior court of Alameda county, under date of November 20, 1923, for the crime of burglary. This record sets forth that, upon the defendant's being informed of the information charging him with burglary and a prior conviction for destroying and injuring a jail, he entered a plea of guilty to the charge and admitted that he had suffered the prior conviction charged in the information.

[6, 7] It is urged that the evidence is not sufficient to show that this defendant is the same person previously convicted, as described in the two certified copies referred to. While there is a slight difference in the spelling of the name, the principle of idem sonans applies. Even the attorney for appellant spells the name Gillespie, throughout his brief filed in this appeal. The defendant, himself, upon the stand, denied any prior convictions. The stepmother of defendant was asked the following question: "Q. What was it that Mr. James Gillespie told you about having been where he could not ride in automobiles?" After an objection was overruled, she replied: "A. Why he was in Folsom prison, been there for five years. Q. Do you know what for? A. Yes, sir, stealing." She also testified that she knew that he was sentenced in the superior court of Alameda county to a term in Folsom prison for burglary; that he had written to them from the prison; that her husband had signed the papers to get him out on parole, and had brought him to their home in order to give him a fresh start. An effort was made to attack the weight of this evidence by showing on cross-examination that the witness was blind, and therefore could not read; that she had never been in court at the time the defendant was convicted; and that she had not actually seen the parole papers. In addition to such weight as the circumstances give to the other portions of her evidence, her answer to the first question, above quoted, shows an admission by the defendant to her that he had served a term in Folsom prison. We think this alone is sufficient. People v. Hettick, 126 Cal. 425, 58 P. 918. On cross-examination, she stated she had not talked a great deal to the defendant about the matter, but nothing was brought out to shake her statement that she had some conversation with him on the subject. Appellant's father also testified that he knew his son had served a term in Folsom prison for burglary; also that he had corresponded with appellant while he was at Folsom, and, when asked if knew how appellant's release from Folsom had been obtained, he replied: "Why, I saw his parole officer, I signed for his release."

[8] In reference to the prior conviction in Imperial county, not only does the certified copy of the proceedings in the superior court of Alameda county show that the defendant in that case admitted such a prior conviction in Imperial county, but, in addition, defendant's mother testified that she knew appellant had served a term in San Quentin, and that this was on account of a sentence by the Imperial county court on or about August 29, 1921. On cross-examination, she admitted that she was not personally present in court when he was convicted, but she was not cross-examined on other sources of knowledge, and, so far as appears from the record, she may have seen him there. In the absence of anything to throw any doubt upon it, we think that her statement that she knew he had served such a term, together with the admission of the defendant in the Alameda county case, that he had been convicted of such an offense in Imperial county, with the other evidence that the person convicted in the proceedings in question in Alameda county was the same person as this defendant, is sufficient to sustain the finding as to this prior conviction.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

HAMMOND LUMBER CO. v. MOORE et al.
Civ. 7236.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 18, 1930.

1. Statutes $\S$ 35½ — Adoption by Initiation — Effect — Constitutional restrictions.

That Land Title Law was adopted by initiation did not remove it from restrictions of Constitution (Land Title Law, § 93).

2. Statutes $\S$ 115(2) — Title — Subject-matter.

Land Title Law, adopted by initiative method, must express subject of act in title (Land Title Law, § 93; Const. art. 4, § 24).

3. Statutes $\S$ 35½ — Constitutional restrictions — Application — Initiatory measures.

Mandate, limitation, and restriction imposed on Legislature by Constitution is obligatory on people when legislating by initiatory method (Const. art. 20, § 15).

4. Records $\S$ 9(2) — Statute — Filing of lien — Constitutionality.

Law requiring notice of mechanics' liens to be filed in registrar's office held not unconstitutional as impairing right to lien or unduly hampering its exercise (Land Title Law, §§ 29, 47, 93; Const. art. 20, § 15).

5. Statutes $\S$ 117(3) — Filing notice of lien — Constitutionality — Title.

Law requiring that notice of mechanics' liens be filed in registrar's office held not unconstitutional as not being expressed in title of act (Land Title Law, § 93; Const. art. 4, § 24).

6. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 3 — Special enactment — Prior statute — Conflicts.

Land Title Law, being special enactment, controls earlier enacted Code provisions in conflict therewith (Land Title Law, § 93; Code Civ. Proc. § 1187).

Land Title Law, § 93 (St. 1915, p. 1946), after expressly recognizing provisions of Mechanics' Lien Law, did not purport to supersede requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as to recordation of the claim of lien and its contents, but merely supplements that section by adding a new procedural step by requiring filing of another notice in a different form and place.

7. Records — 9(13¼) — Recording — Filing notice of lien.

Lien claimant who recorded lien, as required by Code, but did not register it with registrar, as required by Land Title Law, held not entitled to lien, notwithstanding recorder and registrar were same person (Code Civ. Proc. § 1187; Land Title Law, §§ 47, 93).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Action by the Hammond Lumber Company against F. Allen Moore, Elizabeth M. Johnson, and others. Judgment for plaintiff against the first named defendant. From a judgment against Elizabeth M. Johnson, and others, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wilbert C. Hamilton and Charles H. Dummer, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

GRAY, Justice pro tem.

In this action to foreclose a materialman's lien, the court, in accordance with the admissions and stipulations of the parties, found that respondent Johnson, the owner of the land involved, contracted with defendant Moore for the construction of a building on that land; that appellant sold to defendant Moore building material, which was actually used by him in such construction, but for which payment had never been made; that appellant recorded in the office of the county recorder its claim of lien in the manner, form, and time required by section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but never filed any notice of its lien, as required by section 93 of the "Land Title Law" (Stats. 1915, p. 1932); that, prior to the furnishing of any material, the title to said land had been registered under the "Torrens Law" (Stats. 1897, p. 138, superseded by the "Land Title Law"); and that a deed of trust, conveying such land in trust, as security for a note owned by respondent Cressey had been registered, subsequent to the commencement of furnishing such material. From these findings, the court concluded that appellant was entitled to a personal judgment against defendant Moore, but that it had no lien upon said land because of its failure to file its notice of lien as required by said section 93. Appellant appeals from the judgment denying it a lien, in accordance with the conclusions of law, urging that such conclusions are erroneous (1) because said section 93 is unconstitutional in that (a) it, by unreasonable increase of procedure, violates article 20, section 15, of the Constitution, creating mechanics' liens and commanding and restricting the Legislature to provide for their speedy and efficient enforcement, and (b) the omission in the title—"Land Title Law"—of the subject of said section, mechanics' liens, makes said section void under article 4, section 24, of the Constitution, and (2) because, as a matter of construction, the "Land Title Law," which is a general law, cannot amend the Mechanics' Lien Law, which is a special law, enacted in the Code.

[1-3] At the outset, we feel that respondents' argument that, as the "Land Title Law" was adopted by initiation, it is equal in force and effect and unrestricted by the Constitution, is incorrect. Wallace v. Zinman, 200 Cal. 585, 254 P. 946, 62 A. L. R. 1341. That decision is also authority adverse to their contention that article 4, section 24, requiring the subject of an act to be expressed in its title, is not here applicable, because the law in question is an initiatory measure. Furthermore, the reasoning of that case satisfies us that the mandate, limitation and restriction, literally imposed upon the Legislature by article 20, section 15, is also obligatory upon the people when legislating by the initiatory method.

The relation between the right to a lien and the mandate for legislative provision for its enforcement is well stated in Diamond M. Co. v. Sanitary F. Co., 70 Cal. App. 695, at page 701, 234 P. 322, 325, as follows:

"The right of mechanics, materialmen, etc., to a lien upon property upon which they have bestowed labor, or in the improvement of which material which they have furnished have been used, for the value of such labor or materials, is guaranteed by the Constitution, the mode and manner of the enforcement of such right being committed to the Legislature. Article 20, § 15, Const. Manifestly, the Legislature is not thus vested with arbitrary power or discretion in attending to this business. Indeed, rather than power so vested in the Legislature, it is a command addressed by the Constitution to the lawmaking body to establish a reasonably framed system for enforcing the right which the organic law vouchsafes to the classes named. Clearly, it is not within the right or province of the Legislature, by a cumbersome or ultratechnical scheme designed for the enforcement of the right of lien, to impair that right or unduly hamper its exercise. Every provision of the law which the legislature may enact for the enforcement of the liens mentioned in section 15 of article 20 of the Constitution must be subordinate to and in consonance with that constitutional provision. Hampton v. Christensen, 148 Cal. 729, 737, 84 P. 200."

[4] Does section 93 of the "Land Title Law" impair the right to lien or unduly hamper its exercise? If so, such section must be held unconstitutional as violative of article 20, section 15. Section 93 reads as follows:

"Notice of liens under the provisions of the mechanics' lien laws of this state shall be filed in the registrar's office, and a memorial thereof entered by him upon the register, as in the case of other charges, and such liens may be enforced as now or hereafter allowed by law. Until such notice is so filed and registered, no lien shall be deemed to have been created."

Before such notice can be filed or affect the title of the land, or impart any notice, it "must have noted thereon a statement of the fact that the land sought to be affected is registered land, with the name of the registered owner and with the number * * * of the certificate * * * of the last registration thereof." Section 47 of the act. As to similar matters, section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires that the claim of lien shall be recorded in the office of the county recorder, and shall give the name of the owner or reputed owner, if known, and a description of the property sufficient for identification. No error in the description of the property invalidates the lien unless the property has passed to an innocent purchaser without notice direct or constructive. Code Civ. Proc. § 1203. The requirement of said section 93 for an additional filing of a notice does not appear to be unduly burdensome. Nor can it be said that the requirement of said section 47 as to the matters to be stated on such notice unduly hampers the enforcement of the lien, because such information can be readily obtained by an examination of the "register of titles," provided by section 29 of the act. Such additional labor in the preparation of the notice of lien lessens the work preparatory to filing the foreclosure complaint, because this examination provides the names of the defendants who are interested in the land.

[5] Appellant argues that, as the subject of mechanics' liens treated in section 93 is not expressed in the title of the act—"Land Title Law"—such section is void. Const. art. 4, § 24. In holding untenable a similar attack, broader, but inclusive of the same point, upon the "Torrens Law," the Supreme Court in Robinson v. Kerrigan, 151 Cal. 40, 50, 90 P. 129, 133, 121 Am. St. Rep. 90, 12 Ann. Cas. 829 (approved in Frances Investment Co. v. Superior Court, 189 Cal. 107, 208 P. 105), used the following language, here decisive:

"These provisions relate to the subjects of felonies, county officers, county government, principal and surety, attorneys at law, judgments, liens, procedure, and adverse claims, respectively, and it is claimed that the act is void because none of them are mentioned in the title. And it is intimated that, if they were mentioned, the law would be contrary to the mandate of the Constitution that the act shall embrace but one subject. If the first proposition is well taken, it is certain that the second is also established; but the mere statement of the objection is almost sufficient to refute it. While it is true that none of the subjects thus designated are expressed in the title, they are all germane to the general subject there expressed, and, taken together, they compose a part of the general scheme and are appropriate to effect the main object of the law. Further examination would have disclosed a large number of such 'subjects' in the body of the act, which are not mentioned in the title. The same criticism might be made of many acts on a general subject which have always been considered as valid. The act establishing the scheme is the appropriate place for provisions necessary to make it effective and symmetrical. If it were necessary to mention every subdivision of the general subject of an act in the title, to the extent here claimed, our statutes would present a somewhat ludicrous appearance. The statement of the subject in the title would generally occupy almost as much space as the act itself. Furthermore, if subjects, as intended by the Constitution, must be so minutely subdivided, it would be impracticable to enact any comprehensive law on any general subject, by reason of the necessity of dividing it into so many separate acts. The provision must receive, and it has received, a more liberal construction. The word 'subject' is given a broader meaning. People v. Mullender, 132 Cal. 217, 64 P. 299. All the provisions objected to as constituting a different subject are reasonably necessary as means for attaining the object of the act indicated by the subject which is expressed, and hence they are considered as included in the title, as subdivisions of the general subject there stated. People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 636; Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 P. 251; Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 44 P. 915, 45 P. 1057; People v. Linda Vista Irr. Dist., 128 Cal. 477, 61 P. 86; Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 488, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73, 74 P. 28. We think the title to the act sufficiently expresses the subject to which it relates, and that it embraces but one general subject."

The single subject of the act, expressed in its title, is the establishment of a system for the registration of title to land whereby the official certificate will always show the state of the title and all interests therein. Pioneer, etc., Guaranty Co. v. Feraud, 91 Cal. App. 278, 267 P. 134. The manner of enforcement of mechanics' liens is a detail in the accomplishment of such purpose, and is therefore logically germane to the title of the act and included within its scope. Buelke v. Levenstadt, 190 Cal. 684, 214 P. 42; Estate of Welings, 192 Cal. 506, 221 P. 628.

MILES v. McFARLANE et al.

Civ. 4030.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 17, 1930.

[6] We are unable to see the pertinency of appellant's argument that, as a matter of construction, section 93 cannot be held amendatory of, or in anywise affecting, section 1187, because the former is a general law and the latter is a special one, enacted in the Code. No such question has arisen, because a comparison of their respective terms discloses no irreconcilable inconsistency in the treatment of the same subject. Riley v. Forbes, 193 Cal. 740, 227 P. 768. Section 93, in its first sentence, after expressly recognizing the provisions of the Mechanics' Lien Law, does not purport to supersede the requirements of the Code section, as to recordation of the claim of lien and its contents, but merely supplements that section, by adding a new procedural step, in requiring the filing of another notice in a different form and place. It may be that the second sentence of section 93, by denying the creation of a lien unless the notice is filed, violates the fore part of article 20, section 15, of the Constitution, granting a lien. However, we are only here concerned with the first sentence, which, because it is distinct and separate from the second sentence, is not affected by the latter's invalidity. 5 Cal. Jur. 643. Assuming the pertinency of the argument, it is fallacious, because the "Land Title Law" is a special act, and controls earlier enacted Code provisions in conflict therewith. Gill v. Johnson (Cal. App.) 284 P. 510. Our conclusions are in accord with prior decisions holding other similar sections of the "Land Title Law" applicable to the enforcement of a lien, created under Street Improvement Act of 1913 (Hayes v. Handley, 182 Cal. 273, 187 P. 952), created by "Improvement Act of 1911" (Rutledge v. City of Eureka, 195 Cal. 404, 234 P. 82), and for nonpayment of taxes (In re Seick, 46 Cal. App. 363, 189 P. 314).

[7] Lastly, appellant urges that it should not be deprived of its lien, since the recorder, being the same person who is registrar (section 1 of Land Title Law), should have entered a memorial of it in the "register of titles." But identity of person does not create an identity of office and the duties thereof. More v. Board of Supervisors, 31 Cal. App. 388, 160 P. 702. As above noted, section 47 requires certain information not contained in the claim of lien to be noted on the notice of lien, and prohibits the registrar from filing the notice without such information, and further provides that a notice, not having noted thereon this information, does not affect the title to the land. Obviously, if the recorder, as registrar, had filed the claim of lien as a purported notice of lien, it would have been an idle act. Pioneer, etc., Guaranty Co. v. Feraud, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

1. Pleading $\S$ 339 — Complaint — Cause of action — Waiver.

That plaintiff dismissed count in assumpsit, and that prayer omitted reference to such cause of action, indicated waiver thereof.

The complaint, which was by a stockholder of corporation which contracted to buy gold mining claims, paying annual installments therefor, contained three counts, one of which was intended to allege fraud and collusion on part of selling corporation and its stockholders in inducing plaintiff to pay one annual installment, in reliance on representations that sufficient ore could be mined in four or five months with which to repay plaintiff. This count also contained allegations which might have raised issue in assumpsit. The prayer made no reference to cause of action in assumpsit, and another count drawn on that theory was voluntarily dismissed by plaintiff after demurrer thereto had been overruled.

2. Fraud $\S$ 41 — Complaint — Sufficiency.

Complaint by stockholder of corporation which contracted to buy mining claims on installments, alleging fraud by inducing plaintiff to pay installment, held demurrable.

3. Pleading $\S$ 8(1) — Facts — Conclusion — Special demurrer.

Although fact stated as conclusion may be sufficient, in absence of special demurrer, it is insufficient when facts recited fail to justify conclusion.

4. Corporations $\S$ 206(2) — Representative suit — Demand — Refusal — Condition precedent.

Stockholder, before suing for benefit of corporation or its stockholders, must demand that corporation bring action, unless demand would be futile.

5. Corporations $\S$ 320(7) — Complaint — Fraud — Mismanagement — Sufficiency.

Stockholder's complaint alleging fraud arising from "sundry acts of mismanagement, the nature whereof plaintiff is unable to state," fails to state cause of action.

6. Fraud $\S$ 43 — Allegations — Specific acts.

Fraudulent acts relied on for cause of action must be specifically alleged.

7. Frauds, statute of §23(1) — Payment — Debt of another.

Stockholder of corporation which contracted to buy gold mine on installments, when paying amount equivalent to one installment, was not answering for debt of another (Civ. Code, § 1624).

8. Frauds, statute of §158(1) — Payment — Debt of another — Writing — Presumption.

When statute requires written contract, allegation involving promise to answer for debt of another raises presumption contract was written (Civ. Code, § 1624).

9. Contracts §337(2) — Promise to pay — Specific fund.

Count alleging promise to repay from proceeds of sale of gold gravel in certain mine, and that promisors "refused to take the same from said mine," stated no cause of action.

This count of complaint contained no allegations regarding ownership of mine, nor did it allege that promisors were authorized to remove or sell gold. It declared merely that promisors "now have possession of said gold gravel and (have) failed, neglected and refused to take the same from said mine and either mill or sell the same."

10. Pleading §236(1) — Complaint — Second amendment — Discretion.

Court did not abuse discretion in denying leave to amend complaint second time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by E. C. Miles against Malcolm McFarlane and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Dowd & Reagh, of San Francisco, for appellant.

James M. Hanley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

R. L. THOMPSON, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment which was entered against the plaintiff upon an order sustaining a demurrer to the amended complaint and denying leave to again amend the pleading.

The amended complaint contained three counts, the last of which was dismissed by the plaintiff. This last cause of action was based upon allegations of simple assumption.

It was alleged the Marguerite Placer Mining Company executed and delivered to William H. Dowe on May 26, 1921, a written agreement to sell certain gold mining claims in Placer county consisting of 1,100 acres of land, for the sum of $150,000, payable in annual installments of $22,500, which were due on the 15th day of each October until the purchase price was fully paid; first payment was made October 15, 1921; after the first payment one-half of the net proceeds from the operation of the mine was to be turned over to the selling corporation to be applied on the purchase price of the mine; pursuant to authorization the contract was immediately assigned to the Feather Forks Gold Gravel Company, in which corporation the plaintiff held 20 per cent. of the capital stock and became a vice president and director; the three McFarlane brothers who were named as defendants owned 85 per cent. of the stock of the selling corporation; one of these defendants, Gilbert McFarlane, possessed practical mining experience, and had a knowledge of the character and value of the ore contained in the mine and the manner of operating it; he was elected director and managing agent of the new mining enterprise; the plaintiff was without experience in mining, and had great confidence in the knowledge and ability of the said Gilbert McFarlane in that regard; the purchasing corporation defaulted in the payment of the second installment of the purchase price of the property which was due October 15, 1922, and had no assets with which to meet this obligation. It is then alleged that, said sum of $22,500 being due and unpaid, "defendants * * * entered into a conspiracy to induce plaintiff to pay to them the said sum of $22,500, intending that * * * they would * * * make it impossible for said Feather Forks Gold Gravel Company to either repay the said sum to plaintiff or secure sufficient funds by its mining operations to continue to make payments under the said contract, so that the same should become forfeited. * * *" It was then alleged that the last-mentioned corporation was without assets with which to make these payments except such proceeds as might be derived from the mining, milling, and sale of the gold secured from the operation of said claims; that the defendants represented to the plaintiff that "there was then available, blocked out, ascertainable and readily convertible into cash over $50,000 worth of gold ore in said mining properties, and that it would take no more than four or five months at the latest to carry operations in said mine to the point where the said ore could be sold or milled so that money could be realized therefrom and that if plaintiff would advance said sum * * * to save the rights of the said Feather Forks Gold Gravel Company in its contract, * * * both said companies could and would severally repay to plaintiff the said sum; * * * that out of said ore it would be possible to repay plaintiff at the rate of $4,000 per month."

It was then alleged that, relying on these representations, the plaintiff did pay to the defendants said sum of $22,500, but that the defendants made no real effort to operate the mine or extract the gold therefrom, but, upon the contrary, "wilfully, corruptly, deliberately and wantonly impeded, hindered and destroyed the production of said mine by means of sundry acts of mismanagement the nature whereof the plaintiff is unable to state, * * *" with the purpose of causing a breach and forfeiture of said contract; that the purchasing corporation "was unable to secure any funds wherewith to make payments on said contract, and * * * by reason of failure to make any further or additional payments, * * * said mine, under the terms of said contract reverted to and became the property of defendant, The Marguerite Placer Mining Company"; that therefore no part of said sum of $22,500 has been repaid the plaintiff, but that the whole thereof remains due and unpaid; that said mine contains gold ore of the value of $50,000; that the mine became flooded by water, and the operation thereof was abandoned; and that the selling corporation threatens to convert said mine and the proceeds therefrom to its own use and thus prevent the repayment of said sum of money to the plaintiff.

The second cause of action merely alleges that on November 28, 1922, the defendants agreed that, if the plaintiff would pay the defendant corporation the sum of $22,500, the defendants would cause the repayment thereof to be made in installments of $4,000 each month from the gold which was to be taken from said mining claims; that the plaintiff thereupon advanced said sum of $22,500 to the defendant corporation, no part of which has been repaid. It was, however, not alleged that any gold from which this loan was to be repaid was ever secured from the operation of said mining property, or that the defendants had authority to operate the same.

The prayer of the amended complaint asked that a trust and lien be impressed upon the mining property to secure to the plaintiff the repayment of said sum of $22,500, and that a receiver be appointed to take charge and operate said mine for the benefit of the plaintiff until said indebtedness was fully repaid. There was no demand for a judgment for money had and received.

[1] The first cause of action was intended to be based upon a charge of fraud and collusion. It did, however, contain allegations which might raise an issue based on assumpsit, except for the fact that the prayer of the complaint omits reference to such a cause of action, and the third count, which was drawn upon that very theory, was voluntarily dismissed by the plaintiff, after a demurrer to this count had been overruled and the defendants were given fifteen days in which to answer it. It must be assumed, therefore, that the plaintiff intended to waive his right to prosecute the action on the ground of assumpsit.

This leaves only the question as to whether the first count sufficiently states a cause of action founded on fraud and collusion, and whether the second cause of action is sufficiently alleged.

[2-4] Neither cause of action is sufficiently alleged, and the trial court properly sustained the demurrer. The first cause consisted of allegations of fraud and collusion against the Marguerite Placer Mining Company and its majority stockholders. The purchasing corporation, which held the equitable title to the property, was not made a party to the action. It is difficult to see how the plaintiff could hope to procure the appointment of a receiver and take charge of the Feather Forks Gold Gravel Company without making it a party to the action. By virtue of the contract this purchasing corporation had the exclusive right of possession. The complaint fails to adequately allege that the Marguerite Placer Mining Company became reinvested with the title to the mine. It is stated that "by reason of failure to make * * * payments * * * said mine, under the terms of said contract reverted." This is a mere conclusion which is expressly based upon the assumption that the contract declares an automatic forfeiture for failure to pay the installments. While the allegation of an asserted fact which is stated in the form of a conclusion may ordinarily be sufficient in the absence of a special demurrer, it is rendered inadequate, however, when the recited facts upon which it depends fail to support the conclusion. A conclusion has no greater force than the express premise upon which it is founded. The allegation regarding the reversion of title to the mine is based solely upon the assumption that it occurred "under the terms of the contract." The contract is made a part of the complaint, and it contains no such provision for a forfeiture or reversion of title for default in the payment of installments of the purchase price. The complaint therefore fails to adequately allege title or right of possession of the mine in the selling corporation. The plaintiff held no title to the mining property equitable or otherwise, except as a stockholder of the purchasing corporation. There is nothing in the allegations of the complaint that would create an involuntary trust in the property in the plaintiff's favor, nor impress the mine with a lien to secure the payment of the $22,500 which he paid to the corporation defendant. If, as a stockholder of the Feather Forks Gold Gravel Company, the plaintiff desired to institute an action for the benefit of that corporation or its stockholders, it was necessary that he should first demand of the corporation that it should institute the action in its own behalf and receive its refusal to do so, or it must appear that such demand would be futile because the corporation was in the control of hostile representatives. 6 Fletcher's Cyc. of Corp., p. 6936, § 4068; Fornaseri v. Cosmosart Realty & Bldg. Corp. (Cal. App.) 274 P. 597. No such demand, refusal, or situation is alleged or appears in the pleadings.

[5, 6] The complaint fails to specify the acts of alleged fraud upon which the plaintiff relies. It affirmatively appears that he complains of "sundry acts of mismanagement, the nature whereof plaintiff is unable to state." This is fatally defective. Fraudulent acts which are relied upon for a cause of action must be specifically alleged. 12 Cal. Jur. 800, § 62.

[7, 8] The respondent assumes that the payment of the $22,500 by the plaintiff was based upon a promise to answer for the debt of the Feather Forks Gold Gravel Company, and that, under section 1624 of the Civil Code, it would be void, unless some memorandum thereof were in writing. This payment, however, appears to constitute an original obligation. The transaction was not a promise to pay the debt of another. It was the actual payment of a sum of money. Whether it were recoverable as money had and received by the defendants, or upon the theory of money procured by fraud or false representations, it would constitute an original obligation on the part of the defendants. But, even though it be deemed to be founded on the promise to answer for the debt of another, the allegation of an agreement to repay the money presumes that the contract was in writing, when the statute requires it. 12 Cal. Jur. 938, § 107.

[9] The second cause of action merely alleges the payment of the money and a promise on the part of the defendants to repay it within six months, from a specific fund, to wit, the proceeds from the sale of gold gravel in a certain described mine. No reference is made to the allegations contained in the first count. The ownership of the mine and the gold contained therein is not alleged. Nor is it stated that the defendants were authorized to mine or sell the gold. All that is alleged in that regard is that the defendants "now have possession of said gold gravel and (have) failed, neglected and refused to take the same from said mine and either mill or sell the same." This count, therefore, fails to state a cause of action. When the intent of the parties is expressed to the effect that the payment of money is to be made from a specific fund, and not otherwise, the failure of such fund will defeat the right of recovery. 48 C. J. 594, § 11; 6 Cal. Jur. 452, § 269; Lynch v. Keystone Cons. Mining Co., 163 Cal. 690, 126 P. 968; Clarey v. Security Portland Cement Co. (Cal. App.) 279 P. 483.

[10] The plaintiff was granted leave to file one amended complaint. No abuse of discretion on the part of the court appears in denying leave to again amend the pleading. In the absence of such abuse of discretion, the judgment which is entered upon an order sustaining the demurrer will be upheld. 21 Cal. Jur. 119, § 77.

The judgment is affirmed.

MERRITT v. REY.
Civ. 4022.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 27, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1) — Review — Finding of fact — Delivery of deed — Intent.

Grantor's intention in executing and leaving deed with conveyancer held question of fact for trial court, whose solution will not be disturbed on appeal, if supported by substantial evidence.

2. Deeds ⇨208(3) — Possession — Grantee — Prima facie evidence.

Possession of deed by grantee creates prima facie evidence of absolute delivery and grantor's intention to vest title in grantee.

3. Deeds ⇨142 — Reservations — Life estate — Validity.

Realty may be conveyed to be enjoyed by grantee only at grantor's death, in which case grantor will be regarded as presently conveying title subject to life estate (Civ. Code, § 767).

Civ. Code, § 767, provides in substance that future estate may be limited by act of party to commence in possession at future day.

4. Deeds ⇨60 — Evidence ⇨461(2) — Grantor's intention — Parol testimony — Title after delivery.

Though oral testimony is admissible to show grantor's intention in parting with custody of deed, grantee after delivery takes title free from incumbrances not expressed.

5. Deeds ⇨208(3) — Delivery — Evidence — Sufficiency.

Evidence in action to quiet title held to support conclusion that grantor absolutely delivered deed, though she reserved life estate.

6. Deeds ⇨209 — Record — Estoppel — Evidence.

Evidence in action to quiet title held not to support conclusion that grantee was estopped to assert title, notwithstanding failure to record deed.

7. Deeds ⇨88 — Unrecorded deed — Validity.

Unrecorded deed is valid as between parties and those having notice thereof (Civ. Code, §§ 1213, 1217).

8. Adverse possession ⇨115(1) — Question of fact.

Question of adverse possession is one of fact to be determined from circumstances and conduct of parties.

9. Adverse possession ⇨85(1) — Delivery — Grantor's use or occupancy — Subject to legal title.

Where realty was absolutely conveyed, grantor's use or occupancy of premises will be deemed to have been subject to grantee's legal title (Code Civ. Proc. § 321).

Code Civ. Proc. § 321, provides in substance that person establishing legal title to property is presumed to have been possessed thereof within time required by law.

10. Adverse possession ⇨63(4) — Vendor and purchaser — Grantor's hostile possession.

Grantor may acquire title by adverse possession against grantee notwithstanding conveyance where he retains hostile possession, openly and notoriously asserting title (Civ. Code, §§ 1006, 1007).

Civ. Code, §§ 1006, 1007, provides in substance that occupancy for any period of time confers title sufficient against all, and that occupancy for period prescribed by Code Civil Procedure as sufficient to bar action for recovery of property confers title thereto denominated title by prescription which is sufficient against all.

11. Limitation of actions ⇨197(1) — Realty — Possession within five years — Evidence — Sufficiency.

Evidence in action to quiet title held to show grantee's predecessor was seized or possessed of property within five years before commencement of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 318).

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action by Ellen E. Merritt against John Rey, as administrator of the estate of Mary J. Rey, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

O'Hara, Hatch & Pope, of Vallejo, for appellant.

Percy E. Towne, of San Francisco, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J.

This is an appeal from a decree quieting title to an apartment house and lot in Vallejo which was conveyed to the respondent by a gift deed from her sister. It is claimed the evidence fails to show a valid delivery of the deed.

Mary J. Kelly held title to the family home of her parents situated at Vallejo, which was conveyed to her by a gift deed from her mother in October, 1906. The property was valued at $3,500. She married John Rey April 14, 1909. The respondent, who is the sister of Mrs. Rey, was formerly named Ellen E. Jahn. She lived in San Francisco. There was a close bond of attachment between these sisters. The homestead was rented, and Mary Kelly lived with her brother Frank at Vallejo. The day before the wedding Mary Kelly summoned her sister to Vallejo, and, informing her of the proposed marriage, said: "I am going to transfer my property over to you as a deed of gift. * * * I want the property to stay in the Kelly family, and you are entitled to the property, and I want to deed it to you for the kindness you have shown me all your life. * * * She told me that * * * she wanted to deed that to me before she was married because she did not want her husband to have any of that property that belonged to my father and mother." They went together to the office of a conveyancer named James O'Hara, who drew the deed, reciting the consideration to be that of "love and affection." The deed was then handed to the grantee by either the grantor or the conveyancer, and she hand it back to Mr. O'Hara "for safe keeping," because, as she said, "I had no deposit box; I had no place to keep the deed."

He kept the deed in his safe until about two years later, when, at the request of the grantor, he sent it to the grantee, accompanied with the following letter:

"Vallejo, California, February 18th, 1911.

"Dear Mrs. Jahn: Your sister requested me to forward the enclosed (deed) to you. I suppose she saw you in reference to the same.

"Very truly yours,

"James V. O'Hara."

The respondent kept the deed in her own safe deposit box until after the death of her sister, which occurred March 18, 1926. She then recorded it March 20, 1926.

The foregoing transaction respecting the execution and delivery of the deed is substantially corroborated by Mr. O'Hara. The object and fact of the transfer as above related were corroborated by Miss Katie Callen, a lifelong friend of the grantor, who related statements frequently made to her by Mary Kelly.

In the execution and delivery of this deed, it was understood by the parties to the conveyance that the grantor reserved the use and benefits of the property during her lifetime. From all the conversations and conduct of the parties with relation to the property, it seems clear that the transfer of title was made absolute, subject, however, to the reservation of a life estate in the grantor. After the marriage of Mary Kelly and John Rey, they lived with her brother Frank at Vallejo for some time, paying him rent for their apartment. From time to time the homestead, which is involved in this appeal, was substantially improved at an expenditure of several thousand dollars. At the time of the death of Mrs. Rey the value of the property had increased to $10,000. It was converted into a four-flat apartment house. For several years it was rented for $65 or more a month. Mary J. Rey paid all the taxes, insurance, and cost of improvements, which expenditures she told her sister were eventually repaid by the income from the property. In making the improvements and maintaining the property during the seventeen years which elapsed between the time of the execution of the deed and the death of the grantor, she borrowed money from time to time, securing the several loans by mortgages upon this property. In 1910 she and her husband joined in a mortgage to the First Savings Bank of Vallejo to secure a loan of $1,600. This mortgage was subsequently renewed in January, 1914, to secure the balance of $1,400. In both of these mortgages it was recited that the property was "the separate property of Mary J. Rey." In 1917 a loan of $2,500 from the Central Bank of Vallejo was also secured by a mortgage on the same premises. In December, 1922, Mrs. Rey was ill. She still owed the Central Bank $400. Mr. Tarmey, the manager of this bank, testified that Mr. Rey wanted to borrow the additional sum of $1,000. It was agreed that the respondent would advance sufficient money to pay off the obligation to the bank and also furnish Mr. Rey with the additional sum of $1,000. It developed during the interview that Mrs. Rey was already indebted to her sister for a balance of $500. Mr. Tarmey advised the spouses to execute a mortgage upon the same premises for the entire indebtedness amounting to $1,900. This was done. Nothing was said about the existence of the gift deed. About the time the last loan was negotiated, and while Mrs. Rey was ill, she told her sister that Mr. Rey was worrying her about conveying the property to him, and that she was "uneasy." In reply to this, the respondent testified: "I told my sister that if it would make peace in the family, and would make Mr. Rey and her happier, I would deed it back to her. My sister said she would not listen to anything of the sort." A reconveyance was not made.

The appellant, as the duly qualified administrator of the estate of Mary J. Rey, deceased, contends that: (1) The evidence shows a failure to deliver the deed or an intent on the part of the grantor to then pass the title to the grantee; (2) the conduct of the respondent in failing to record her deed and in permitting the grantor to continue to enjoy the use and benefits derived from the property and the mortgaging thereof estops the grantee from asserting title thereto; (3) appellant held title adversely to the grantee; and (4) the statute of limitations bars this action.

[1, 2] We are of the opinion that none of these claims is well founded. These problems are all merged in the question as to whether title was actually vested in the grantee by the deed of conveyance. While there is a conflict of testimony regarding the delivery of the deed and affecting the intent of the grantor to presently convey title to the property, the findings and judgment are amply supported by the evidence. The question regarding the intent of the grantor in executing and leaving the deed with the conveyancer and as to whether she thereby parted with all control over the instrument and then actually transferred title to the grantee are problems of fact to be determined by the court, and its solution will not be disturbed on appeal, where there is substantial evidence to support the conclusions. Moore v. Trott, 162 Cal. 268, 122 P. 462; Hefner v. Sealey, 175 Cal. 18, 164 P. 898; Hodoian v. Garabedian, 79 Cal. App. 762, 251 P. 227. Even though a doubt may exist as to the absolute delivery of the deed at the time when it was first left with the conveyancer, there can be no doubt of the grantor's complete surrender of all control over the instrument when, at her direction, it was subsequently sent by the conveyancer to the grantee, who thereafter retained sole and complete dominion over the document until it was recorded after the death of the grantor. The very possession of the deed by the grantee creates prima facie evidence of both an absolute delivery and intent to then vest in the grantee the title to the property therein described. Stewart v. Silva, 192 Cal. 405, 221 P. 191; Hodoian v. Garabedian, 79 Cal. App. 762, 251 P. 227; 8 R. C. L. 999, § 62; 2 Tiffany on Real Property, p. 1750, § 461.

[3-6] The fact that the grantor improved the property and increased its value, that she paid the taxes, insurance, and cost of improvements, and appropriated the income therefrom, may reasonably be reconciled with her declaration that she wished to reserve the use and benefit of the property during her lifetime. There is now in America no legal obstruction to the conveying of title to real property which is to be enjoyed by the grantee only at the death of the grantor. Under such circumstances the grantor will be regarded as presently conveying the title subject to the reservation of a life estate therein. Section 767, Civ. Code; Ripperdan v. Weldy, 149 Cal. 667, 674, 87 P. 276; 1 Tiffany on Real Property (2d Ed.) p. 551, § 159. While oral testimony is admissible for the purpose of determining the intent with which the grantor relinquished her custody of the deed (Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703; Hodoian v. Garabedian, 79 Cal. App. 762, 769, 251 P. 227), after the delivery of the deed has been adequately shown, the grantee takes the title free from all conditions which are not expressed therein (Mowry v. Heney, 86 Cal. 471, 25 P. 17; Blackledge v. McIntosh, 85 Cal. App. 475, 483, 259 P. 770; Weldon v. Lawrence, 76 Cal. App. 530, 535, 245 P. 451). While it was, therefore, proper to consider the reservation by the grantor of the use and benefits derived from the property during her lifetime in order to determine whether she intended to presently pass the title to the grantee, this situation is not necessarily in conflict with the theory of an absolute conveyance of title, and is insufficient upon which to upset the findings of the court to the effect that title actually did pass to the respondent. Nor is the fact that the grantor assumed the right to subsequently mortgage this property upon several occasions inconsistent with the absolute transfer of the title. There was no legal obstacle to the grantor mortgaging her life interest. In the case of Brandt v. Brandt, 85 Cal. App. 720, 260 P. 342, a deed of gift which was executed and delivered in escrow was held to convey absolute title to the grantee in spite of the fact that the grantor subsequently executed five different mortgages on the property and attempted to deed it to another grantee. The circumstance most favorable to the contention of the appellant in the present case was the fact that the grantee permitted the mortgaging of this property to herself to secure her loan of $1,900. Even this transaction is, however, not conclusive evidence of a failure to actually convey title. It is a mere circumstance to be weighed for the same purpose that the other mortgages were considered in determining the intent of the grantor in executing and delivering the deed of conveyance. The facts of this case do not conclusively establish either a failure to transfer the title on the part of the grantor nor estoppel on the part of the grantee. There is substantial evidence to support the judgment on both of these issues.

[7] The failure to record the deed had no particular significance in the present case. An unrecorded deed is valid as between the parties and with all those who have notice thereof. Blackledge v. McIntosh, 85 Cal. App. 475, 483, 259 P. 770; sections 1213 and 1217, Civ. Code; Lewis v. Brown, 22 Cal. App. 38, 133 P. 331.

[8-10] So, likewise, the question of adverse possession is one of fact to be determined by the circumstances and conduct of the parties. Assuming that the evidence in the present case adequately supports the finding of an absolute conveyance of title to the grantee, the use or occupancy of the premises by the grantor will be deemed to have been subject to the legal title of the grantee. Section 321, Code Civ. Proc.; 2 C. J. 143, § 246; Gernon v. Sisson, 21 Cal. App. 123, 131 P. 85; Wolf v. Gall, 176 Cal. 787, 792, 169 P. 1017; 2 Tiffany on Real Property (2d Ed.) p. 1932, § 503. It is true that a grantor may acquire title by adverse possession pursuant to sections 1006 and 1007 of the Civil Code against his grantee in spite of a preceding deed of conveyance, where he retains hostile possession of the premises openly and notoriously asserting title thereto. Baker v. Clark, 128 Cal. 181, 187, 60 P. 677; Lord v. Sawyer, 57 Cal. 65. There is, however, no evidence in the present case to support such a claim. The grantor never asserted title to this property hostile to the grantee after her execution and delivery of the deed to her sister.

[11] It is contended that this action is barred by the provisions of section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the ground that the grantee's predecessor in title was not actually "seized or possessed of the property in question, within five years before the commencement of the action." There is no merit in this claim. The evidence is without conflict to the effect that the grantor was seized and in possession of the property to the very time of her death, enjoying the benefits of the life estate which she had specifically reserved therein.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WEEKS.Cr. 19.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

March 27, 1930.

1. Homicide ☞253(1)—Murder — First degree — Evidence — Sufficiency.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for murder in first degree.

The evidence showed that defendant fired shotgun through screen and canvas-covered opening near front door of his home, from which three guests had just departed. The defendant had quarreled with two of them, making threats against their lives, but had no enmity toward the man whom he shot.

2. Homicide ☞7 — Murder — Definition.

"Murder" is unlawful killing of human being with malice aforethought, whether express or implied.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Murder," see Words and Phrases.]

3. Homicide ☞12 — Express malice — Murder — Intent to kill.

"Express malice aforethought," as element of crime of murder, exists when there is manifested deliberate intention unlawfully to take life of human being.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Express Malice," see Words and Phrases.]

4. Homicide ☞9 — Murder — First degree — Definition.

If intent to take human life unlawfully be followed by act, whether or not appreciable time intervenes, which results in taking of human life with malice aforethought, it is "murder in first degree."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Murder in First Degree," see Words and Phrases.]

5. Homicide ☞17 — Shooting wrong person — Murder — First degree.

That defendant in discharging shotgun with intent to kill took life of person other than intended victim could not reduce crime from murder in first degree.

6. Criminal law ☞1166½(12) — Trial court's remarks — Prejudice.

In murder case, trial judge's remarks in presence of jury, respecting time to object and effect of rulings thereon, held not prejudicial.

7. Criminal law ☞1035(3), 1129(1) — Misconduct of judge — Review — Objection — Assignment of error.

Alleged misconduct by trial judge will not ordinarily be considered on appeal unless aggrieved party called court's attention to impropriety and assigned error.

8. Criminal law ☞1048, 1129(1) — Prejudicial error — Exception — Assignment.

Where error is so serious that prejudicial effect could not be removed by admonishing jury, exception and assignment of error are unnecessary.

9. Criminal law ☞655(5) — Delay — Conduct of judge — Accelerating trial.

Although counsel may create exasperating delays and indulge in repetitious questioning of witnesses, judge should exercise patience in endeavoring to speed up trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Robert B. Lambert, Judge.

Willie Weeks was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals.
Affirmed.

Calvin H. Conron, Jr., of Taft, and Frederick E. Hoar, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MARKS, Acting P. J.

Appellant was charged with the crime of murder in the first degree, alleged to have been committed on the 5th day of October, 1929, in the county of Kern, state of California. He was charged with killing Isaac Ross, and went to trial upon his plea of not guilty. The jury returned a verdict finding him guilty as charged, and fixed his punishment at confinement for life in the state penitentiary.

The evidence offered by the people shows that defendant and his family, consisting of himself, his wife, and her brother, lived in a shack a short distance from the city of Bakersfield in Kern county. On the night of October 5, 1929, defendant, who was colored, with J. I. Fuller, Henry C. Lorendo, and another white man, were engaged in playing a game of stud poker at Weeks' residence. Shortly after midnight another party arrived at the house. It was composed of Maceo Daniels, Arthur Humphreys and his wife, Walter Brite, and a man name White. After the arrival of this party, Joe Johnson and Isaac Ross reached the house. Both of these parties were colored.

Of the first party, Daniels, Humphreys, and Brite entered Weeks' home, and the first two joined the poker game, taking the place of two of the white men. Of the second party, Ross alone entered the house.

Shortly after Daniels and Humphreys started to play poker, a controversy arose between them, and, as all of the witnesses for the people testified defendant started cursing the other two negroes, calling them vile and indecent names. Daniels tried to quiet Weeks, but, as he was unable to do so, he and Humphreys cashed in their checks and left the game. They passed into the front room of the house, Daniels going out the front door. Weeks also went into the front room and demanded that Humphreys pay him $3 which he claims was owing him. Weeks armed himself with a shotgun and told Humphreys that, if he did not pay him the money, he would blow his head off. Humphreys pleaded for his life, and told Weeks that he did not have the money, but would get it for him. Weeks continued to curse and threaten Humphreys, who then called upon his friend Daniels for aid. Daniels re-entered the room, and Weeks turned the shotgun on him. Daniels told Weeks that he should not kill a boy for $3, and, continuing to talk to him advanced until he was close enough to grasp the barrel of the shotgun and force the muzzle down to the floor. He and Weeks struggled for the possession of the gun, and in the struggle Weeks was shoved backwards toward the kitchen, where he grasped a butcher knife, and, drawing it back, threatened to kill Daniels with it. Humphreys ran from the room and house and was followed by Daniels and Ross. Just where Ross had been during the altercation is not entirely clear, but the three men left the room and house in the order named. Just after Ross had disappeared through the front door, Weeks fired the shotgun through a screen and canvas-covered opening in the front wall of the house and slightly to the left of the front door through which the three men had disappeared; the charge of shot from the gun striking Ross and penetrating his back, hip, and thigh, causing his death within a short time.

The evidence for the defendant presents the defense of accidental homicide. He testified that, when Daniels and Humphreys joined the poker game, they were boisterous and used vile and profane language in the hearing of his wife. He remonstrated with them, and, according to his version, Daniels made an assault upon him with a knife. Defendant armed himself with the shotgun against the murderous assault by Daniels. He and Daniels struggled for the possession of the gun, and during the struggle it was unintentionally discharged, the shots passing through the window and hitting Ross. The testimony of both Weeks and his wife, who corroborated this story told by Weeks, was rather thoroughly impeached by contradictory statements made by them the day after the homicide.

Defendant presents but two points on this appeal. He maintains that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict of the jury finding the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, and that at most it could only support a conviction of murder in the second degree. He also complains of remarks and statements of the trial judge made in the presence of the jury which he maintains constituted prejudicial error.

[1] We cannot agree with appellant that the evidence did not justify the verdict of the jury according to the testimony of the witnesses for the people and in fact, by the almost undisputed evidence in the case according to the testimony of a number of witnesses. Defendant applied the vilest of epithets to both Humphreys and Daniels, and, when they sought to retire from the imminent danger of an attack by him, he detained Humphreys at the muzzle of a loaded shotgun, with threats to blow his head off if he did not pay him $3. When Daniels interfered and attempted to prevent the murder of his friend, Weeks armed himself with a knife, in addition to the shotgun, and attempted a murderous assault upon Daniels. Daniels and Humphreys sought escape from the attack in flight, and were followed from the house by deceased. Weeks, apparently intent upon carrying out his threats to take the life of either Humphreys or Daniels, fired through a window in the general direction that the fleeing men had taken. He did not hit his antagonists, but killed his friend.

[2-5] Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. The malice may be express or implied. It is express when there is manifested a deliberate intention to unlawfully take the life of a human being. The intent must exist in the mind of the killer, but there is no need for an appreciable length of time to elapse between the formation of the intent and the execution of the act. The act may follow the intent as rapidly as thought may pass through the mind, and, if the intent be followed by an act which results in the taking of human life with malice aforethought, it is murder in the first degree. People v. Mendenhall, 135 Cal. 344, 67 P. 325. In the case before us we have all the elements of this crime. The malice was express, also the intent to take life, and because the defendant, in carrying out his threats and his felonious intent, took the life of his friend rather than the life of his supposed enemy, cannot excuse his act or reduce the degree of his crime.

[6] Appellant complains of remarks of the trial judge in the presence and hearing of the jury. The only such remarks to which an objection was noted by him occurred during the following colloquy:

"Mr. Bailey: I will call your attention—

"Mr. Hoar (interrupting): Now, Your Honor, at this time we object to any reference to any diagram to be shown this witness on the ground that the proper foundation has not been laid, and possibly I can ask that witness one question that will lay the foundation.

"Mr. Hoar: Q. You were not present at the time the homicide was committed were you, were you? A. No sir.

"Q. And you made your diagram just a little over a week ago? A. Last Saturday.

"Q. Are you able to state to the court of your own knowledge that the house was in the same condition last Saturday as it was the time the homicide was committed?

"Mr. Bailey: I didn't ask the witness to produce anything yet.

"The Court: No, this is not the time to make any objection. In the first place whether this is in the same condition or whether it is not; I assume the highway is still out there that was there and things like that; he has made a chart; if it is not correct you can show that it is not, but don't start objecting so early.

"Mr. Hoar: Now if your Honor please, I take exception to your Honor's remarks, the law gives us a right to object whenever we want to.

"The Court: Well, I have overruled the objection.

"Mr. Hoar: That is all right.

"The Court: You can just get out of the habit of arguing with me every time I make a ruling, because my ruling is binding on everybody, and we are not going to take up a lot of time arguing about these matters. When we come to a question where there is a vital question asked, then we will have a ruling on it; he has made a map here, and if it is not right you have a chance to show that it is not right.

"Mr. Hoar: I thought Your Honor did make the statement that we were not to make objections so early."

We do not believe that these remarks were sufficient to prejudice the case of appellant before the jury.

[7, 8] It is the well-settled law in this state that the claim of misconduct on the part of the trial judge, under ordinary conditions, will not be considered on appeal, unless the party relying on the alleged misconduct promptly called the attention of the court to the purported impropriety and assigned misconduct thereon. This is to give the judge an opportunity to correct the error, if any, and prevent any prejudice resulting therefrom by promptly instructing the jury to disregard the statements made. People v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 545, 140 P. 256. It is also the rule that, where the error of the court was so serious that no successful effort could be made to remove its prejudicial effect, an exception and assignment of the remarks as error would not be necessary. People v. Mahoney, 201 Cal. 618, 258 P. 607.

[9] The record before us shows that things were said during the trial which might have been omitted. People v. Osborn, 12 Cal. App. 148, 106 P. 891. Most of them occurred during the court's numerous efforts to speed up the trial, which was unduly protracted by counsel for appellant. In their cross-examination of witnesses, they repeatedly went over the same ground, until, instead of making progress with the case, they were only marking time. Under such trying circumstances a trial judge should extend his patience to the limit in presiding at the trial. After reading the entire record of the long trial, we are satisfied that remarks of the trial judge did not result either in prejudice to the defendant or in a miscarriage of justice. The evidence showed that the defendant was guilty of murder in the first degree. The verdict was the most favorable to him that could be expected. The jury did not exact the extreme penalty for the crime which it might have done under all of the circumstances of the case. When measured by the final results, as disclosed by the verdict, the defendant was not prejudiced by any action of either the court or counsel during the trial.

The defendant having failed to assign the remarks of the trial court as error, and these remarks not having been of such a nature that their prejudicial effect, if any, could not have been cured by prompt instructions to the jury to disregard them, we must follow the well-settled rule that we will not review them here. People v. MacDonald, supra; People v. Marsiglia, 52 Cal. App. 385, 198 P. 1007; People v. Walker, 15 Cal. App. 400, 114 P. 1009.

McDONALD v. SMOKE CREEK LIVE STOCK CO. et al.

Sac. 4233.

Supreme Court of California.

March 29, 1930.

1. Mortgages ⇨333 — Trust Indenture — Default — Dual remedies — Effect — Equitable mortgage.

That trust indenture authorized upon default trustee's sale or foreclosure action did not render instrument equitable mortgage requiring statutory foreclosure (Code Civ. Proc. § 726 et seq.)

2. Mortgages ⇨337 — Trust Indenture — Foreclosure action — Trustee's sale.

That action was commenced and still pending to foreclose trust indenture did not prevent subsequent trustee's sale authorized by instrument.

3. Judgment ⇨570(12) — Dismissal — Want of prosecution — Effect.

RICHARDS, J.

This action was instituted by the plaintiff for the purpose of having his title quieted as against the defendants to a certain large tract of land, embracing about 12,000 acres, lying and being in the county of Lassen, and also as to certain water rights and contractual rights having their origin in certain uses made of the waters which have their source in a large lake upon said land, and which water and contract rights are embraced in a property known as the Madeline Irrigation Project. The plaintiff alleges that the defendants claim to have some right or title in or to or some lien upon said lands and properties, but which claim of right or title has no foundation in law or fact. The defendants appeared in said action, and by their several answers not only denied any right or title in or to said lands and properties, or any portion thereof, to be in the plaintiff, but also set forth their and each of their respective ownership or interest in said properties and in the whole thereof. The cause came to trial upon the issues as thus framed before the court sitting without a jury and resulted in a judgment in favor of the defendants and each of them, based upon a finding of the trial court that the plaintiff had no right, title, or interest in said premises or any portion thereof, and that the defendants had both record title and title by adverse possession in and to their respectively asserted interests in said properties. This is an appeal from such judgment.

The plaintiff and defendants each claim title from a common source. On and prior to November 1, 1910, the foregoing properties were owned by a corporation known as Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company, which corporation on said last-named date borrowed from Farwell Trust Company of Chicago, Ill., the sum of $250,000, evidenced by certain interest-bearing promissory notes, to secure which it executed and delivered a certain instrument in the form of a trust indenture to the Mercantile Trust Company, a California corporation, as trustee, for its aforesaid creditor, Farwell Trust Company. The Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company having later defaulted in certain payments of principal and interest falling due upon said promissory notes, the properties covered by said instrument were attempted to be sold under the trust provisions thereof, and were by such trustee transferred to the purchaser at said sale, who by certain mesne conveyances transferred certain portions of said properties to the defendants herein, who now claim to own and hold the same by virtue of the title thereto thus acquired. The plaintiff's asserted claim of title to said property is based upon a conveyance executed on January 3, 1918, by Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company to W. K. Ephraim and wife, and by a subsequent conveyance thereof made by the latter grantees to plaintiff on June 20, 1925.

The primary and in fact the controlling contention made by the plaintiff upon the trial of this action and urged as his chief ground of reversal upon this appeal is that the aforesaid instrument executed by the Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company as security for its indebtedness to the Farwell Trust Company, and which forms the foundation of the defendants' claim of title to the lands and properties involved in this action, was not in law or fact such an instrument that the trustee named therein was entitled to claim to be a trust deed so as to justify the foreclosure thereof by means of the trustee's sale undertaken to be made by said trustee, by means of which the defendants allege themselves to have become respectively the owners of the entire title of, in, and to said properties and the whole thereof. The instrument in question was dated November 1, 1910, and, after reciting the execution of certain promissory notes made and executed of even date therewith evidencing the then existing indebtedness of Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company to Farwell Trust Company, in an amount aggregating the said promissory notes, proceeds to set forth that the Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company for the purpose of securing the payment of the principal and interest to become due upon said promissory notes "does hereby grant, bargain, sell, assign and transfer unto said party of the second part [Mercantile Trust Company], its successors and assigns forever, as trustee of the trust herein and hereby created and declared, all and singular the property, both real and personal, which is hereinafter particularly described [describing it] * * * to have and to hold all and singular the property herein granted or intended to be granted, and every part and parcel thereof, with the appurtenances thereunto belonging, unto said trustee, its successors and assigns forever, for the purpose of securing the payment of both the principal and interest to grow due upon the said promissory notes unto the owners and holders thereof without any preference or priority of any note over any other note, and for the purpose of securing the performance of the covenants and promises of the party of the first part herein contained, in accordance with the terms and provisions of said promissory notes and of this indenture, upon trust to sell as an entirety or in parcels as it may elect, free and clear of any right of redemption on the part of the party of the first part and its successors and assigns all and singular the property then subject to the charge of this indenture, and to apply and dispose of the proceeds as hereinafter provided, if and only if default shall be made by the party of the first part in the payment of either the principal or interest to grow due upon any of said promissory notes." The instrument further proceeds to set forth the terms and conditions attending said sale and form and content of the notices to be given, as preliminary thereto by said trustee. The instrument further provides that "whenever conditions shall occur which shall give rise to the right or duty upon the part of the trustee to exercise the power of sale hereinbefore conferred upon it, then the trustee may forthwith proceed to protect and enforce the rights of the holders of said promissory notes under this indenture by commencing and prosecuting in any court of competent jurisdiction a suit or suits in equity or at law for the foreclosure of this indenture, or for the purpose of obtaining the aid and direction of such court in the execution of the trusts hereby created and the powers hereby granted, or for the purpose of obtaining any other appropriate legal or equitable remedy, * * * No remedy herein provided for the benefit of the holders of said promissory notes is intended to be exclusive of any other remedy, but every such remedy shall be deemed to be in addition to any other remedy given hereunder, or now or hereafter provided by law, and may be availed of by the trustee from time to time as often as the latter deem expedient. No failure or omission on the part of the trustee, or of any holder of any of said promissory notes, to exercise any right or power hereby conferred, shall impair any such right or power, or shall be construed a waiver of the right to exercise the same."

It is the contention of the appellant that the foregoing instrument, by virtue of the dual nature of the remedies provided therein for the enforcement thereof, as well as by the nature of the properties, real and personal, to which its descriptions related, was such an instrument as could not be construed to possess the characteristics of a deed of trust so as to entitle the trustee to undertake to carry into effect a foreclosure thereof in the form and manner which gave rise to the title which the defendants now claim to own and hold respectively in said properties; but that such an instrument was and is in legal effect none other than an equitable mortgage, requiring foreclosure proceedings in an appropriate action, and which proceedings, though commenced by said trustee, never having been consummated, the defendants have no right, title, or interest in said properties or any portion thereof. In support of this contention, the appellant upon the trial of this action undertook to show, and in fact did show, that in the year 1913 the Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company being in default of its payments upon the principal and interest of said promissory notes, the Mercantile Trust Company commenced an action for the foreclosure of said instrument in the superior court in and for the county of Lassen. On November 13, 1914, the defendants in that action filed their answer and cross-complaint. Said action was not brought to trial within five years thereafter, and was for that reason, on February 21, 1920, dismissed upon motion of the defendant Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company, for want of prosecution. The record herein further discloses, however, that on September 24, 1917, after due notices given thereof and while said foreclosure suit was still pending, the Mercantile Trust Company as trustee, under the terms of said instrument and pursuant thereto, proceeded to hold and conduct a trustee's sale of the properties described therein, at which sale R. M. Sims and Paul McDonald were the bidders for and the purchasers of said properties, and to whom as such purchasers and on September 25, 1917, the Mercantile Trust Company made and executed its deed to the whole of said properties under and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said instrument and of such sale, and that the aforesaid Sims and McDonald have by mesne conveyances transferred unto the defendants herein all of the right, title, and interest respectively which they and each of them acquired by virtue of such sale.

[1-3] As to the foregoing contention of the appellant to the effect that the instrument in question amounted to nothing more than an equitable mortgage, requiring foreclosure in the ordinary course of a legal proceeding, we are of the opinion that this contention has no merit. This court at an early date decided that, notwithstanding the statutory proceeding embodied in section 726 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for the foreclosure of mortgages, there was nothing therein which prevented the making and execution of trust deeds as security for obligations, by the terms of which the creditor or his trustee might be empowered to sell the premises therein described upon default in the payment of the debt secured thereby, and that, upon the conduct of a sale in accordance with the terms of the power thus conferred, the title to the premises granted by way of security in that form passed to the purchaser upon the execution of a deed by such trustee. Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 298; Bateman v. Burr, 57 Cal. 480; Bell Silver, etc., Mining Co. v. First National Bank, 156 U. S. 470, 15 S. Ct. 440, 443, 39 L. Ed. 497. The law affecting the validity of trust deeds, having been thus early established, has continued to be the law of this state with relation to that form of security, and many thousands of trust deeds have been executed and enforced and the title to innumerable pieces and vast areas of property passed thereunder; and it has been long customary in the form and content of such trust deeds to provide for the foreclosure thereof either by an action of foreclosure in the courts or by a trustee's sale, at the option of the trustee or beneficiary thereunder. In the case of Bell Silver, etc., Mining Co. v. First National Bank, supra, it was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Justice Field writing the opinion, that "the power of sale in the indenture, whether we call it a deed of trust or a mortgage, does not change its character as an instrument for the security of the indebtedness designated, but it is an additional authority to the grantee or mortgagee, and, if he does not choose to foreclose the mortgage by any of the ordinary methods provided by law, he can proceed under the power added for the sale of the property to obtain payment of the indebtedness. The insertion of a power of sale does not affect the mortgagor's right to redeem so long as the power remains unexecuted and the mortgage is not, as it may be, foreclosed in the ordinary manner, but when a sale is made of the interest of the mortgagor his right is wholly divested, embracing his equity of redemption." It follows from the well-established law as set forth in the foregoing decisions and from long-established custom in conformity therewith that the fact that the instrument here in question invests the creditor or his trustee with the dual forms of remedy provided therein does not render such instrument subject to the appellant's contention that it amounts to no more than an equitable mortgage, requiring foreclosure in the form of an action provided for in section 726 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The appellant, however, makes the further contention that the creditor or his trustee having, as above stated, commenced an action for the foreclosure of said instrument in the courts of law, an election to pursue that form of remedy had thus been made, which prevented the creditor or his trustee from thereafter undertaking to foreclose the instrument through the form and procedure of a trustee's sale. We are constrained to hold that this contention is also without merit, in view of the decision of this court in the case of Mayhall v. Eppinger, 137 Cal. 5, 69 P. 489, 490, wherein this court not only upheld the validity of a trust deed containing the foregoing dual provisions, but further upheld the rights of the creditor or his trustee to conduct a trustee's sale, even though he had previously commenced a foreclosure action which was still pending and undetermined. In discussing this situation, the court said: "It is quite probable that Eppinger discovered after he had filed his complaint that he had misconceived the meaning of the deed and his rights under it, and thereupon concluded to go no further with his action, but proceed, rather, to sell as trustee under his deed. This we think he could do without having first dismissed the action, and his proceeding to act as trustee is an acceptance of the trust." The fact that the trustee under the instrument here in question undertook the foreclosure of said instrument through the form and conduct of the trustee's sale, upon which the title of the respondents to the several properties affected by the instrument is founded, while the action theretofore instituted in the courts for the foreclosure of the instrument was pending, brings the instant case directly within the holding of this court in Mayhall v. Eppinger, supra; and the further fact that said legal action was subsequently dismissed for want of prosecution in accordance with the statutory provisions providing for and requiring such dismissal cannot be held to have given the appellant any further right in the premises, since it is well settled that the dismissal of action for that cause in the manner which the statute provides does not amount to a judgment upon the merits by which the plaintiff in such action is bound.

[4] It follows from the foregoing considerations that the trial court was correct in its findings of fact and conclusions of law and in the decree based thereon, determining that the plaintiff, by virtue of the conveyance to him of said premises, having for its foundation the series of conveyances following the deed made on January 3, 1918, by Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company to W. K. Ephraim and wife, obtained no title to the premises and properties in question, and was hence entitled to no relief in this action. It would seem to be sufficient to rest the decision of this cause upon this conclusion. But there have been certain other proceedings heretofore undertaken by the parties to this immediate controversy or their forbears, in various other tribunals, which it would seem should be referred to as enforcing our foregoing conclusions. In the year 1914, when the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco was threatening to institute a proceeding for the foreclosure of the foregoing trust instrument through a trustee's sale thereunder, the Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company commenced an action in the superior court in and for the county of Lassen against the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco and Farwell Trust Company of Chicago et al., to enjoin said defendants from selling or attempting to sell the aforesaid lands and properties of the Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company, or any portion thereof, under the provisions of said deed of trust as threatened by said defendants. This action, after the appearances of the defendants named therein in the form of answers fully setting forth the rights of them and each of them to proceed to sell said properties under the power contained in said trust instrument, came to trial before said court, with the result that on December 8, 1914, a judgment was duly entered therein, declaring and decreeing "that the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco is entitled to proceed under the power contained in the trust deed already alleged and set forth in the plaintiff's complaint to sell, and sell, the property therein described and referred to, in accordance with said trust deed," and that the plaintiff take nothing by said action. This judgment, not having been appealed from, in due course became final, and must be held to have been res judicata as to the issue thus directly decided therein, and, being thus binding upon the plaintiff in said action, must also be held to have been binding upon the plaintiff herein holding, as he does, by mesne conveyances from the Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company made subsequent to said decision.

[5] It further appears herein that on July 12, 1919, W. K. Ephraim and A. F. Ephraim, his wife, the immediate grantees from the Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company, as above set forth, commenced an action in the federal District Court for the Northern District of California against the Madeline Water Company, one of the defendants in the present action, and also against the Nevada & California Land & Live Stock Company, the predecessor in interest of the main defendant herein, Smoke Creek Live Stock Company, the purpose of which was to quiet the title of the plaintiffs in that federal action to the properties involved herein. Said action came before said court upon the direct issue as to the right of the plaintiffs therein by virtue of their conveyance from the Madeline Meadows Land & Irrigation Company to maintain the same, and was decided upon that issue after a trial upon the merits before Judge Rudkin, who on November 13, 1920, made and entered a decree expressly adjudicating that the plaintiffs in said action had no title to the properties involved therein and which were the same properties as those involved in the present action. The plaintiffs in that action appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Federal District, which court on August 7, 1922, affirmed the decree of the District Court, Judge Gilbert writing the opinion, concurred in by Justices Ross and Hunt, wherein that court decided not only that the decision of the superior court above referred to was res judicata as to its interpretation of the trust deed in question, but that the judgment of dismissal of the foreclosure action above referred to "is in no sense res judicata of any question involved herein." Ephraim et ux. v. Nevada & California Land & Live Stock Co. et al., 282 F. 610, 612. A writ of certiorari sought by the plaintiffs to the Supreme Court of the United States was denied by that tribunal on January 8, 1923, 260 U. S. 748, 43 S. Ct. 248, 67 L. Ed. 494. It would seem also that this action on the part of the predecessors in interest of the plaintiff herein, which thus became a finality, was also res judicata as to the rights and interests of the plaintiff in the present action to the properties involved in both.

We might go further in this decision to determine the other issues presented upon this appeal and which relate to the finding of the trial court in favor of the respondents upon the issue of adverse possession; but, since the determination of that question involves a review of the evidence presented thereon before the trial court, we do not deem it necessary to pass upon such issue, in view of the fact that the questions already herein considered are fully and finally determinative of the rights of the parties to this appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. LOWE.

Cr. 3261.

Supreme Court of California.

March 28, 1930.

1. Indictment and information $\S$ 159(2) — Sufficiency of indictment — Amendment.

Indictment stating sufficiently, but imperfectly, matter indicating commission of crime charged, held susceptible of amendment upon district attorney's motion under Code (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1008).

2. Criminal law $\S$ 308 — Conduct of accused — Interpretation.

Whenever reasonably possible, acts and conduct of accused are to be given innocent interpretation.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 427(5) — Guilt — Sufficiency of evidence — Admitting coconspirator's confession.

Evidence of defendant's guilt of presenting false claim to insurer for robbery held insufficient to authorize admission of alleged coconspirator's confession implicating defendant in robbery (Pen. Code, $\S$ 549; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1870, subd. 6).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William T. Aggeler, Judge.

Ollie Lowe was convicted of a violation of the Penal Code, $\S$ 549, and she appeals.

Atty., and A. H. Van Cott, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

RICHARDS, J.

On September 13, 1928, the grand jury of the county of Los Angeles presented to the superior court thereof an indictment wherein Evan B. Seitz and Ollie Lowe were jointly charged with the commission of several crimes as set forth in the five separate counts of said indictment. The several crimes of which the defendants were thus accused embraced that of robbery and also of attempted robbery of several persons occurring at the same time as set forth in the first three counts of the indictment, and also of the crime consisting in the violation of section 548 of the Penal Code of the state of California as set forth in count 4 of the indictment, and of the further crime consisting in the violation of section 549 of the Penal Code of the state of California as set forth in the 5th count of the indictment. The defendants, when arrested upon the warrants issued pursuant to said indictment, appeared separately with demurrers thereto, and the defendant Ollie Lowe separately moved to set aside the indictment, and particularly count 4 thereof as subsequently amended upon motion of the district attorney. The demurrers were overruled and the motion of the defendant Ollie Lowe to set aside the indictment as amended was denied, and thereafter she was separately brought to trial upon the amended indictment, and was thereupon acquitted of the offenses of robbery and attempted robbery as set forth in the earlier counts of said indictment, but was found guilty of the offense charged in the fourth count thereof, which consisted of the alleged violation of section 549 of the Penal Code. A motion for a new trial having been made by the defendant Ollie Lowe and denied, she took her appeal from the judgment of conviction based upon said verdict and from the order denying her motion for a new trial. Her appeal was taken to the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second Appellate District, Division 2, wherein said judgment was reversed. A petition for hearing in this court made on behalf of the Attorney General was granted and the cause has been submitted to this court for decision.

The primary and undisputed facts which formed the basis of the several counts contained in the indictment of these defendants by the grand jury were these: On the afternoon of the 12th of April, 1927, the defendant Ollie Lowe, with a friend of hers named Mrs. Brown, was visiting at the home of a friend of the former, named Mrs. Cummins, together with several other women who had also met at the same place. Mrs. Lowe had brought liquor and was engaged in making concoctions thereof for the party when the doorbell rang and two men appeared, claiming to be federal officers, who had reason, as they stated, to believe that illicit liquor was on the premises. The leader and spokesman of the pair was one Schaeffer, who, as it later appeared at the trial, was a man of many aliases and the possessor of a long criminal record, and who among his associates in the criminal world was known as the "Iron Duke." The two men when thus admitted upon the former pretense proceeded to despoil the women present of their jewelry and also to possess themselves of certain money belonging to Mrs. Cummins, after which they departed with their loot. Suspicion having been directed against said Schaeffer and his companion and also against said Evan B. Seitz for his alleged participation in the conspiracy which led up to the commission of these several crimes, these two men were on or about April 27, 1927, subjected to arrest upon a railroad train which they had boarded separately and upon which they were apparently proceeding toward San Francisco for the purpose of disposing of the jewelry which had been taken from the several women at the aforesaid place and time, and a considerable portion of which was found to be in their possession at the time of their arrest. The "Iron Duke" when thus arrested and incarcerated presently made a confession to the officers of the law as to the part which he had played in the conception and commission of said several crimes, and in which confession he implicated both the defendant Seitz and the appellant herein, Ollie Lowe, in forming and carrying into effect the conspiracy to commit and the commission of said crimes. It was upon receipt of this confession that the indictment by the grand jury followed. Upon the separate trial of defendant Lowe, held after her demurrer had been overruled and her motion to dismiss the indictment against her, particularly as to count 4 thereof as amended, had been denied, and after a jury for the purposes of said trial had been sworn, the prosecution undertook to offer in evidence the confession of the "Iron Duke"; but upon the objection that no proper foundation had been laid for its introduction, and that the same was therefore inadmissible under the provisions of section 1870, subdivision 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure, having relation to proof of a conspiracy, the witness was withdrawn and the prosecution proceeded with the introduction of evidence which it was claimed upon said trial, and is insisted here, sufficiently laid the foundation for the admission of the confession of the "Iron Duke," and having proceeded with the introduction of such evidence the prosecution again offered in evidence said confession; whereupon the same objection was made to its introduction, but which objection was by the trial court overruled; whereupon said confession being admitted in evidence fully and directly connected said Seitz with the conception of the plan to despoil the women guests of Mrs. Cummins of their jewelry; and, if the statements of Seitz made to the "Iron Duke" during the preliminary stages of the conspiracy as to the connection already established between Seitz and Mrs. Lowe and as to the part which each of these was to play in the carrying into effect of the aforesaid criminal design were believed, also fully and directly implicated Mrs. Lowe in the formation and carrying out of the details of the conspiracy. It was doubtless upon the circumstantial confession of the "Iron Duke" that the jury found no difficulty in convicting the defendant and appellant herein of the violation of section 549 of the Penal Code and of the commission of the acts set forth in count 4 of the indictment.

Upon this appeal the defendant Lowe makes two main contentions, the first of which is that the trial court was in error in permitting the amendment of count 4 of the indictment after the presentation thereof and at the instance of the district attorney; and the second is that the evidence was insufficient under the provisions of section 1870, subdivision 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure, as forming a foundation for the admission in evidence of the confession of the "Iron Duke."

[1] As to the first of these two contentions, we are not disposed to spend much time or space in its consideration, for the reason that upon an examination of the indictment in its original form we are satisfied that there was stated therein matter which sufficiently, but perhaps imperfectly, indicated the commission of the particular crime intended to be covered by the terms of section 549 of the Penal Code, and that this being so the indictment as to that count thereof was susceptible of amendment upon motion of the district attorney under the provisions of section 1008 of the Penal Code, and under the authority of Chrisman v. Superior Court, 59 Cal. App. 305, 210 P. 632, and of People v. Thal, 61 Cal. App. 48, 214 P. 296.

[2, 3] This leaves for our consideration the second and most vital contention urged by the appellant upon this appeal, and in the course of such consideration such a review of the evidence offered by the prosecution as, independently of the confession of the "Iron Duke," would satisfy the aforesaid statute requiring a sufficiency of proof of a guilty connection on the part of the defendant Ollie Lowe with the conception and carrying forward of the alleged conspiracy to justify the admission in evidence of said confession. We have given to the record herein embracing such evidence a most careful perusal, and as a result of such examination we are fully satisfied that the evidence educed by the prosecution for the purpose of laying the proper foundation for the introduction of the testimony of the "Iron Duke," in so far as the same related to the complicity of Mrs. Lowe in the undoubted conspiracy between himself and Seitz to commit the several crimes enumerated in the indictment herein, was entirely insufficient to form the foundation for the admission as against her of the testimony of the "Iron Duke." We shall not review that evidence in detail further than to state its content in brief, showing that Mrs. Lowe was at the time of the commission of said offenses a married woman who had for a considerable period of years resided in or in the vicinity of the city of Los Angeles; that upon the trial of this action she was not content to rest her reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity upon the presumption with which the law, at the inception of a trial, enfolds a person charged with crime, but offered in evidence the affirmative testimony of a considerable number of witnesses who had known her for many years, and who testified that her reputation in the communities wherein she had resided for truth, honesty, and integrity was good; to which testimony the prosecution offered no rebuttal; that at the time of these alleged offenses she was the owner in her own right of properties in the form of real estate in and about the city of Los Angeles of the aggregate value of several hundred thousand dollars, upon which the incumbrances were comparatively inconsequential; and that her husband was also the owner of an orange orchard in Tulare county, Cal., consisting approximately of a hundred acres of the estimated value of $100,000, and in which she had the community interest of a married woman; that she was also the owner of a considerable quantity of valuable jewelry which she was wont to wear, and which was insured at the valuation placed upon it by the appraisal of the insurer, but which consisted of a number of individual pieces which she had received as gifts or had possessed for a number of years, and which had, by reason of these facts, a sentimental value to her much in excess of their appraised valuation; that her only acquaintance with her codefendant Seitz had arisen out of the fact that for a time several years before, he was a tenant of hers in an apartment house of which she was the owner; that the latter was a bootlegger who had occasionally, up to a year before the commission of the robberies in question, sold her liquor. The only connection between herself and Seitz at any near time prior to the commission of the offenses in question was that furnished by the testimony of the "Iron Duke" and which rested wholly upon the hearsay statements of Seitz himself. There is not a particle of evidence to be found in the record, either in or out of the confession of the "Iron Duke," that he had ever seen or known or had any direct connection with this defendant prior to the moment when he despoiled her of her jewelry in the home of Mrs. Cummins. There is no evidence whatever that the party of ladies who met at the home of Mrs. Cummins upon that fateful afternoon were brought together through any preconcert or connivance of Mrs. Lowe, with the single exception of the fact that she and her friend Mrs. Brown had planned paying a visit to Mrs. Cummins' apartment and had persuaded the latter to remain at home for the purposes of such a visit; but that as to the other ladies who also called upon that afternoon, their coming was casual and was not the result of any prearrangement on the part of Mrs. Lowe. The fact that the latter brought to the home of Mrs. Cummins a small quantity of gin, which was being served to the ladies at the time the robberies occurred, has no possible connection with any existing conspiracy to commit said crimes; nor is the fact that Mrs. Lowe, after she had been despoiled, in common with the other ladies, of her jewelry, regarded the situation more calmly than the rest, a circumstance of any particular significance, in view of the showing that she was a rather unemotional and self-possessed woman. As to the evidence regarding Mrs. Lowe's application to the insurance company for reimbursement of her losses, and as to her willingness, at the instance of his wife, to furnish such bond as would be required for the release of Seitz upon bail following his arrest, the imputations of guilt arising therefrom are matters of the vaguest surmise. Apart from these considerations there was not in the evidence offered by the prosecution, even including that supplied by the confession of the "Iron Duke," any sufficient rational or even believable showing of an adequate motive in the defendant for engaging in a conspiracy to commit this particular series of crimes. There is no showing that her codefendant Seitz was other than a casual acquaintance, or that he occupied such a relation toward her as would enable him to exert any controlling or sinister influence over her life and conduct. The pitiful percentage which was, according to the evidence of the "Iron Duke," to constitute her share in the loot, which was to consist mainly of her own jewels, could be of no consequence to a person of her means, and even that percentage, if swelled by the recovery of her entire insurance, would not restore to her the actual, not to say sentimental, value of her lost jewelry. From every viewpoint of the evidence in this record the absence of motive is so apparent that the prosecution does not venture to argue, or even to suggest, that such motive was even remotely shown to exist. Taken all in all and viewed from the aspect that, whenever reasonably possible, they are to be given an innocent interpretation, we are constrained to hold that the acts and conduct of the defendant, relied upon by the prosecution as furnishing sufficient basis for the introduction as against her, of the testimony of the "Iron Duke," are entirely insufficient to measure up to the requirements of such proof under any reasonable application of the provisions of subdivision 6 of section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is not necessary to amplify authorities to sustain this position.

It follows from the foregoing considerations that the trial court was in error in permitting the introduction in evidence of the confession of the "Iron Duke," in so far as the same related to any guilty connection of the defendant and appellant herein with the crimes in question in the way of being a co-conspirator with her codefendant Seitz and with the "Iron Duke" and his confederates in the commission of said offenses.

The judgment and order are reversed.

HENNESSEY et al. v. ROBINETT et ux.★
Civ. 6889.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 27, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 26, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 26, 1930.

1. Estoppel §118 — Encroaching building — Sufficiency of evidence.

Evidence in suit in ejectment sustained finding that plaintiffs were not estopped from objecting to encroachment of defendants' house on plaintiffs' land.

The evidence showed that plaintiffs and defendants were adjoining lot owners and that, although plaintiffs knew defendants were building an addition to their house near boundary line, plaintiffs were not aware that defendants were overlapping division line previously established and agreed upon, until more than a year after completion of defendants' house.

2. Ejectment §94 — Surveys — Accuracy — Sufficiency of evidence.

Evidence in ejectment action established that surveys of property were accurately made.

3. Adverse possession §57 — Sufficiency of evidence.

Evidence in ejectment action held insufficient to show defendants were in adverse possession of disputed land for more than twenty years.

The evidence showed without conflict that defendants never were in possession of the disputed strip of land of plaintiffs' adjoining lot until they commenced construction of an addition to their house in 1921, and that the action of ejectment was instituted in January, 1923.

4. Adverse possession §51 — Duration — Decrees of title — Claim to disputed strip.

Decrees of title to lots could not support defendants' claim to strip of land, where both decrees were obtained while strip claimed was inclosed as part of plaintiffs' property (McEnerney Act).

5. Appeal and error §173(2) — Issue not raised on trial — Review.

In absence of issue and evidence on feasibility of removing defendants' structure from overlapping strip of plaintiffs' land, enforceability of judgment could not be considered on appeal.

The judgment directed that the defendants surrender the possession of plaintiffs' land on which defendants' building encroached.

6. Ejectment §93 — Requiring removal of encroachment — Damage — Evidence — Sufficiency.

Contention encroachment did not justify decree requiring defendants to remove it held untenable, where evidence showed loss to plaintiffs would be substantial.

Evidence was introduced to show that the loss to plaintiffs of strip of land on which defendants' building encroached would not only substantially diminish the value of plaintiffs' lot, but would also affect its salability.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by Ellen Hennessey and another against Thomas Robinett and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

A. M. More, of San Francisco (E. B. Mering, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Fabius T. Finch and Paul F. Fratessa, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

This is an action in ejectment wherein judgment was given for plaintiffs and defendants appeal. A previous trial of the action resulted in a judgment in favor of defendants, but on appeal the judgment was reversed Hennessey et al. v. Robinett et al., 198 Cal. 645, 246 P. 1043.

The essential facts established at each trial, as they are set forth in the opinion rendered on the former appeal, and as disclosed by the record on the present appeal, are substantially the same, and briefly stated, are as follows: For a number of years immediately preceding, and at the time of the commencement of the action, plaintiffs and defendants owned adjoining lots fronting on the westerly side of Eighth avenue between Moraga and Noriega streets in San Francisco. Plaintiffs' lot had a frontage of 25 feet and defendants' lot, which adjoined plaintiffs' on the south, had a frontage of 50 feet; and both lots were 120 feet deep. During the year 1900, which was more than 20 years before the action was instituted defendants inclosed their lot with a fence. The northerly line thereof was built along what they believed was the true boundary between the two lots, but it appears that the front portion of the fence was set on their own property six to eight inches south of the division line, and the rear portion was built on plaintiffs' property approximately $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches north of the division line. Eventually the fence fell into a dilapidated condition, and in 1919 plaintiffs proposed to defendants that they replace it with a new one at their joint expense. Defendants refused to enter into such an arrangement, and thereupon plaintiffs proceeded to replace the front 60 feet thereof at their own expense. Before doing so, however, and while the old fence was being removed, defendants came upon the ground and, after considerable argument, pointed out what they stated was the true division line between the lots, and which had been theretofore established by a survey and was at that time marked by a cut in the curb. After the true boundary had been thus designated and agreed upon, plaintiffs stated to defendants that they would set that portion of the fence they were about to rebuild two inches to the north of the division line, so that it would stand entirely on their own property. Defendants told them "to go ahead," that they were entirely satisfied; and the fence was constructed accordingly. A year or two thereafter defendants built an addition to their house along said division line. It was under construction for several months, and was completed during August, 1921. About November, 1922, plaintiffs, having made arrangements to remodel their house nearest said line, were informed by the contractor that there was a shortage in the width of their lot. Thereupon they employed an engineer to check the measurements and it was definitely ascertained that defendants had built the addition to their house flush with the new fence line, thereby overlapping a strip of plaintiffs' property for a width of between $1\frac{1}{2}$ and $1\frac{5}{8}$ inches. Plaintiffs then brought this action in ejectment.

As will be observed from the decision rendered on the former appeal, at the first trial, which took place before a different judge, defendants' answers merely denied the allegations of the complaint relating to plaintiffs' title to the lot therein described, and that defendants were encroaching upon the same; and, although the trial court found that plaintiffs were the owners of the land described in the complaint, it further found " * * * that defendants had maintained a fence between the northerly boundary of defendants' land and the southerly boundary of plaintiffs' land for more than 20 years last past; and that, at all times in the complaint mentioned, plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest acquiesced in the boundary line marked by said fence, as said boundary line had been established for more than 20 years last past; that during the month of September, 1921, defendants erected a dwelling house upon the parcel of land so owned by them; that at all times during the construction of said dwelling house plaintiffs saw said dwelling house being constructed, made no objection thereto, but, on the contrary consented to the erection of said dwelling house, and had a complete knowledge thereof; that said dwelling house is upon the land marked by said fence as hereinbefore set forth for a period of more than 20 years their lot to be made in response to the aforesaid past and is upon the land owned and occupied by the defendants." It was in pursuance of the foregoing findings that judgment at the first trial was entered in favor of defendants.

On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment upon the grounds that the findings above quoted were neither supported by the evidence nor responsive to any issue raised by the pleadings or the evidence. In this regard the court said: "It appears, from the evidence, beyond question that the defendants are encroaching upon the plaintiffs' land to the extent of said overlap. The finding above quoted is not responsive to any issue raised by the pleadings. All question as to the location of the old fence on an agreed boundary line was eliminated, at least so far as the front 60 feet of said fence was concerned, by the construction of the new fence. The fact that the old fence encroached on the defendants' property and established an agreed boundary line by long acquiescence might have been available to the plaintiffs as a basis for the contention that the old fence line was the division line, but they are not so contending. The removal of the old fence and the construction of the new fence entirely on the plaintiffs' land removed all controversy as to the old fence line. No issue as to the estoppel of the plaintiffs by reason of consent to the construction of the defendants' building at its present location or by failure to object thereto was raised by the pleadings, nor does it appear that such an issue was raised by the evidence. There was also no evidence that the defendants' building conforms to the line marked by the old fence."

[1] Before the action came on for trial a second time, defendants amended their answers so as to plead as a defense the facts set forth in the above-quoted finding; but on the second trial the court made a negative finding as to the facts alleged in said defense, and accordingly entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs. It would seem, therefore, that since it was adjudicated on the former appeal upon substantially the same facts, that defendants are beyond question, encroaching upon plaintiffs' land to the extent of said overlap, the main question to be considered and determined on the present appeal is whether the evidence adduced at the second trial is legally sufficient to sustain said negative finding upon the issue of estoppel; and we are of the opinion that it is, for in this regard the record discloses testimony to show that, although plaintiffs knew defendants were building an addition to their house near said boundary line, they were not aware that defendants were overlapping the division line previously established and agreed upon, until more than a year after the completion of the structure, namely, about December, 1922, when they caused a survey of section of their contractor that there was a shortage in the width of their lot; and within a month thereafter this action in ejectment was instituted.

[2] As stated, the true boundary line was evidenced by a cut in the curb, and was pointed out on the ground and agreed to by defendants; but, in addition thereto, the correctness of said line was clearly confirmed by four separate surveys made at different times by different engineers. Three of the surveys were received at plaintiffs' request, and the fourth at the request of defendants. Defendants now challenge the accuracy of all these surveys, but after an examination of the evidence we are convinced that defendants' grounds of attack thereon are not well founded. With reference thereto, the evidence shows that the surveys were made by competent engineers, one of whom was the assistant city engineer, and he testified that the city engineer's office had made a thorough study of the property lines within that block and that the division line between plaintiffs' and defendants' lots as shown by his survey had been definitely fixed by running lines from old established monuments and taking actual measurements on the ground, and that his survey had been checked and rechecked with the official records in the city engineer's office and with the surveys previously made. Moreover, all of said surveys show beyond doubt that defendants' building overlaps plaintiffs' lot to the extent above mentioned.

[3] The answers alleged also and defendants contend that they have been in the actual and adverse possession of the disputed strip of land for more than 20 years; but it is evident from the facts above stated, as well as from the determination on the former appeal, that there is no merit whatever in this contention, because the evidence shows without conflict that defendants never were in possession of the disputed strip of land until they commenced the construction of the addition to their house in 1921, and this action was instituted in January, 1923.

[4] Evidence was also introduced on behalf of defendants to show that in 1909 plaintiffs obtained a decree of title to their lot in conformity with the terms of the McEnerney Act (St. 1906, Ex. Sess., p. 78), and that in 1918 defendants obtained a similar decree of title to their lot. It is manifest, however, that neither of those decrees can serve to support defendants' claim to the strip of land in dispute because, as will be noted, both decrees were obtained while the old fence was still standing and, therefore, said decrees could establish in the respective parties title only to such areas of land as were then inclosed and actually occupied by them; and admittedly the strip of land now in dispute, as well as an additional six or eight inches lying between the old fence line and the true boundary, were, at the time the decrees were obtained, inclosed as part of plaintiffs' and not as part of defendants' property.

[5] Besides adjudging that plaintiffs are the owners of the land described in the complaint and that defendants are encroaching thereon to the extent of said overlap, the judgment directs that defendants forthwith surrender possession thereof, "and that a writ of execution issue * * * commanding the sheriff * * * to place and maintain plaintiffs in the exclusive possession" thereof; and defendants contend that the foregoing terms of the judgment are unenforceable, because plaintiffs, in remodeling their house, constructed the southerly wall thereof within two inches of the northerly wall of defendants' house, thereby making it impossible, as defendants claim, for them to remove their structure from the overlap above mentioned. And it is further urged that in any event the encroachment is so slight that it does not warrant the equitable relief granted.

[6] The question of the feasibility of the removal of defendants' structure from the overlapping strip was not made an issue by the pleadings, nor was any evidence introduced upon that subject; and, in opposition to defendants' contention, plaintiffs assert that such removal is clearly practicable. We are of the opinion that in the absence of such issue and evidence the question of the enforceability of the judgment is not a matter which can be properly considered or determined on this appeal. And in answer to the remaining point urged, it may be stated that evidence was introduced to show that the loss to plaintiffs of the strip of land in question will not only substantially diminish the value of their lot, but will seriously affect its salability.

After a review of the entire record, and full consideration of the points defendants urge in support of their appeal, we are unable to find any reasonable ground for reversal. The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

105 Cal. App. 1

PEOPLE v. LASKER. ★

Cr. 1799.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California.

March 31, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 28, 1930.

1. Corporations ⇨324 — Corporate books — False entries — Evidence — Sufficiency.

Evidence held to support finding that entry on corporate books representing furniture and fixtures was fictitious, notwithstanding absence of testimony fixing definite value (Pen. Code, § 563).

2. Corporations ⇨324 — Corporate books — False entries — Intent — Evidence — Sufficiency.

Evidence in prosecution for making false entry on corporate books held to show intent to defraud, warranting conviction (Pen. Code, § 563).

3. Corporations ⇨324 — Corporate books — False entry — Evidence — Admissibility.

Admitting exhibits, in prosecution for making false entries on corporate books, showing manner in which accounts were tampered with, held not error (Pen. Code, § 563).

4. Witnesses ⇨268(1) — Cross-examination — Corporate books — False entries.

Excluding testimony on cross-examination of state's witness, in prosecution for making false entries on corporate books, regarding embezzlement and confiscation account, held not erroneous (Pen. Code, § 563).

Corporation of which defendant was officer had taken over insurance agency plant and carried account therefor on its books, and such account was one on which alleged false entry was made. Excluded testimony related to profit, if any, made from embezzlement and confiscation of insurance agency plant.

5. Corporations ⇨324 — Books of account — False entries.

Entries in books of account, if entries of actual events, cannot be termed false, no matter what may be their nature (Pen. Code, § 563).

6. Corporations ⇨324 — Corporate books — False entries — Actual transactions — Evidence — Sufficiency.

Evidence, in prosecution for making false entries, held to show that entries involving discount on certain note did not represent actual transaction (Pen. Code, § 563).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet Wilson, Judge.

A. I. Lasker was convicted of making false entries in books of a corporation, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Dudley Robinson and C. Morton Booth, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

WORKS, P. J.

Defendant was convicted, upon five counts, of making false entries in the books of Lasker Finance Corporation. This crime is denounced by section 563 of the Penal Code. Defendant appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict returned against him under the first count of the indictment. It was charged in this count that appellant was a director and the president of the Lasker Finance Corporation, and that as such, with intent to defraud the corporation of a certain sum, he did make, and concur in making, on a certain date, a false entry in its books, thus:

Furniture and fixtures.....	$46,462.79
Insurance Agency plant.....	$175,000.00

It was further alleged that these items meant, and were intended to mean, that, when they were entered, the sum of $46,462.79 of the money of the corporation had been invested in furniture and fixtures, and that $175,000 of its assets was represented in insurance agency plant. Then followed allegations, in appropriate form, that the items were false and that appellant knew they were false.

Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient, for the reason that no testimony was adduced to show the value of the corporation's furniture and fixtures and insurance agency plant. Respondent admits that there is no direct evidence of the value of these assets, but insists that certain features of the evidence show that the two items were excessive and that appellant was aware of that fact. The Lasker Finance Corporation was organized for the purpose of taking over the properties of the A. I. Lasker Corporation, of which older institution appellant was the president as well as of the newer one. These two organizations will henceforth be referred to, respectively, as Finance and A. I. L. It became necessary for Finance to procure from the corporation commissioner a permit to issue to the stockholders of A. I. L. the shares of stock which, by the arrangement between the two corporations, were to go to them for the purpose of consummating the contemplated swallowing up of A. I. L. by Finance. The item "furniture and fixtures" was carried on the books of A. I. L. at $16,187.39, while the item "insurance agency plant" was there shown at $75,000. According to the testimony of one Warshaw, auditor of A. I. L., he was by appellant called into the latter's office before Finance was incorporated, and took with him certain of the books and papers of A. I. L. Appellant then told him that he was intending to "organize or reorganize the corporation" and to ask the corporation commissioner "for a new issue of stock." Appellant also said that he "had intended to increase the amount of furniture and fixtures in the sum of $30,000.00 and to increase the amount of insurance agency plant to $175,000.00," and asked Warshaw what he thought of the idea. The auditor responded that he did not think it was proper to increase the item of furniture and fixtures, as "it was a fixed asset," and the books reflected the true cost of all the furniture and fixtures that "we had in the office," but that he saw no reason why the item of insurance agency plant should not be increased, "in so far as that being an intangible asset, * * * because who is going to determine whether our insurance agency plant is worth this much or that much?" but that "the thing that mattered most was that it would reflect an increase in the surplus account, in the statement that was going to the commissioner." To this appellant replied that he did not see why A. I. L. could not increase the value of both items "at that time." During the conversation Warshaw said to appellant, according to the former, "that in so far as the commissioner of corporations laid so much stress on earned surplus accounts that if they received this statement showing such a large increase in the earned surplus account that they may get the wrong idea as to what our actual surplus was."

On the next day after this conversation Warshaw took to appellant, at the latter's request, a paper containing various matters, among them the items of furniture and fixtures and insurance agency plant as carried on the books of A. I. L. This paper was then left with appellant, who returned it to Warshaw some three months later. It was by the latter destroyed. He testified that, when appellant returned the paper to him, the figures opposite the item "furniture and fixtures" had been canceled in pencil and an amount $30,000 larger inserted in their place in pencil. The figures opposite the item insurance agency plant had been increased by $100,000 by the same method. Warshaw thus testified to what occurred when appellant handed him the paper containing these pencil corrections: "He [appellant] told me that the commissioner of corporations' office had refused to take the statement that they originally sent in with their application; that statement had been marked 'Appraised,' and that the office of the commissioner wanted an actual financial statement of the corporation instead of an appraised statement. He told me to have the stenographer typewrite this statement he returned to me showing effect to the pencil corrections." The typewritten statement was prepared as requested by appellant and was by Warshaw returned to him. Later the commissioner issued his permit to Finance. Following this Warshaw was instructed to open the books of Finance. These books showed a journal entry reflecting a transfer from A. I. L. to Finance of the two items of assets here in question, in amounts as they appear in the first count of the indictment, and a posting of the amounts to appropriate accounts in the ledger. The items were entered in the journal at the direction of appellant.

It is this chain of evidence, with other evidence cumulative of it, upon which respondent relies as a support for the verdict of guilty under the first count, but, before we may determine the contention of appellant that the evidence was insufficient, it becomes necessary to state a chronology of events. The first conversation between appellant and Warshaw occurred after September 15, 1925, but before Finance was incorporated. The next day after this conversation Warshaw gave to appellant the paper containing, among other things, the items of furniture and fixtures and insurance agency plant as carried on the books of A. I. L. On or about September 25, 1925, Finance was incorporated. In December, 1925, appellant returned to Warshaw the paper the latter had given him, but with the pencil changes concerning which Warshaw testified. The first count of the indictment charges that the two items specified in it were entered in the books of Finance on March 1, 1926. The items, as shown by the journal and ledger of Finance, bear that date.

[1] We think the evidence justified the jury in drawing the inference that the increase on the books of the amount representing furniture and fixtures in the sum of $30,000 was fictitious, without testimony fixing a definite value for the furniture and fixtures. Warshaw testified that he said to appellant, during their first conversation, that the item of $16,000, in round numbers, in the books of A. I. L., represented the true value of the personalty in question. The conversation as detailed by him shows no challenge by appellant of the truth of this statement, a challenge which must surely have come from him if the increase he proposed was about to be made for the reason that the books of A. I. L. showed a figure $30,000 less than the real value of the furniture and fixtures. The jury had the right to take appellant's silence here exhibited as a circumstance proving that the increase was made for the purpose of showing on the books an inflated and excessive value for the furniture and fixtures. We doubt whether, in the particular now under discussion, the evidence was sufficient to justify a verdict of guilt as to the increase of the amount opposite the item "insurance agency plant" from $75,000 to $175,000, but it is unnecessary for us so to determine. Both that item and "furniture and fixtures" are included as a single false "entry" in the first count of the indictment, and proof that either of them was false suffices to uphold the verdict on that count.

[2] The next point made by appellant is that the verdict under the first count is not supported by the evidence, for the reason that no intent to defraud was shown by the entry of the two items in the books of Finance. It is said that the harm was done, if any harm there was, by the alterations made in the books of A. I. L. With this contention we cannot agree. The jury could have determined very justly, from the evidence of the prosecution, that the deception sought to have been practiced by appellant would have been incomplete, wholly futile, in truth, but for the entry in the books of Finance. If those books had not agreed, in the matter of the items in question, with the entry in the books of A. I. L., that which the jury had the right to infer it was the purpose of appellant to conceal would at once have stood revealed. At least, if the books of Finance had spoken truth, those of A. I. L. must have been viewed with suspicion, even by the casual observer, with an immediate investigation as the necessary result. We think the evidence clearly established the fact that an improper showing upon both sets of books was necessary to even a temporary and apparent success in appellant's effort to defraud, and that under it the jury properly concluded that appellant had committed a crime in causing the two items to be entered in the accounts of Finance.

[3] At the trial appellant moved to strike out certain exhibits mentioned in the testimony of Warshaw, as above detailed, and showing the manner in which the accounts of A. I. L. were tampered with in the matter of the two raised items above mentioned by us. The motion was denied, and the ruling is assigned as error. We think it was not. The papers fitted nicely with the testimony of Warshaw to the effect that the value of the furniture and fixtures was properly shown on the books of A. I. L., before the items relating thereto were altered, and they were a necessary part of the entire story as to the general scheme to defraud to which we have already referred. In brief, they were necessary to a showing that the items as entered in the books of Finance were false. The entry in those books was false because it was but a repetition of items in the books of A. I. L. which some of the evidence clearly showed were false.

[4] The record shows the following, during the cross-examination of the witness Warshaw by appellant's counsel:

"Q. * * * Was there any profit from the embezzlement and confiscation in that insurance agency plant? A. There is a profit on embezzlement and confiscation, but that has nothing to do with the insurance agency plant.

"Q. Wasn't that carried as a part of the insurance agency plant? A. No, sir, that arises in a different way. It has nothing to do with our agencies, if I may answer that way."

Warshaw also answered a moment later that the profit shown by the embezzlement and confiscation account of A. I. L., to which he referred in the part of the record just quoted, related to insurance, but that it had "nothing to do with any agencies that we had." The counsel then asked several other questions, designed to show what the embezzlement and confiscation account "related to," how the items of the account "were carried," and other interrogations of a similar nature. Objection to all these questions was made on the ground that they were immaterial, and the objections were sustained. In making the rulings, the trial judge remarked that the questions would not be proper, unless it were first made to appear that any profits shown by the embezzlement and confiscation account came from the insurance agency plant of the company, and that it made no difference what earnings were shown by the account, unless it appeared that they came from the agency plant. Further, he observed that the desired cross-examination would be allowed whenever the missing proof was supplied. In view of the answers of Warshaw to the effect that the profit shown by the embezzlement and confiscation account had "nothing to do with the insurance agency plant," that it was not "carried as a part of the insurance agency plant," and that it had nothing to do with any agencies, we think the rulings of the court were correct. Warshaw was a witness early in the trial, and at the time he took the stand there was nothing in the record to controvert his assertion that the profits in question had nothing to do with the insurance agency plant. Appellant says: "The court erroneously took the position that when an adverse witness has given a categorical answer, that that terminates the right to cross-examine further." Appellant, of course, could have cross-examined Warshaw without stint in a reasonable endeavor to shake his statement that the profits referred to bore no relation to the insurance agency plant, but that is far from saying that he could conduct the cross-examination upon which he sought to embark. It seems patent that, if a witness swears that he was not present at the happening of a certain event, and there is nothing elsewhere in the record to show that he was present, it would be improper to allow the cross-examiner to ask him what occurred on the alleged occasion. The imagined situation is somewhat different from the one before us, but it is enough like it to furnish an example at which to point. We think that People v. Degnen, 70 Cal. App. 567, 234 P. 129, and People v. Baldwin, 117 Cal. 244, 49 P. 186, cited by appellant, have no bearing upon the question here presented.

Appellant argues that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict under the second, third, fourth, and fifth counts of the indictment, thus presenting a question of some complexity. The false entries charged in these counts are related to, or interwoven with, each other. The items referred to in the second count are these:

Credit Gallos Note.....	$3,000
Charge W. H. Kemble Account.....	3,000

Those pleaded in the third count are:

Credit W. H. Kemble.....	$3,000
Charge Pacific Service Corporation....	3,000

The fourth count relates to this item:

Accounts Receivable, Commercial
Credit	$3,300

These two items are specified in the fifth count:

Charge Bond Account.....	$3,300
Credit Commercial Credit of California.....	3,300

[5] Not only does appellant insist that the prosecution introduced no evidence that these various items were false, but he contends vigorously that the evidence affirmatively shows that they represent actual transactions of Finance. It is well settled that items in books of account cannot be termed false if they are a history of actual events, no matter what may be the nature of those events. Coffin v. U. S., 156 U. S. 432, 15 S. Ct. 394, 39 L. Ed. 481; Twining v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 141 F. 41. It therefore becomes necessary for us to scan the evidence in an endeavor to ascertain whether the entries here complained of truthfully represent actual transactions, and the labor is one of some magnitude.

The first item mentioned in the second count of the indictment relates to one Gallos, although the name is spelled Gollos in the transcript of the testimony. This individual—and all the witnesses to whom we shall refer in discussing this point were called by the prosecution—testified that he called on one Kemble concerning a loan of $47,500, which he was desirous of procuring. Kemble introduced him to appellant, and the two told Gollos that he might have the loan if he could procure a concern called the Blue Diamond Company as an indorser on the promissory note he was to give as evidence of it. On the next day he returned with the note, indorsed as requested. He saw Kemble and appellant, and they told him he could have the loan if he would discount the note to the extent of $3,000 and would buy $20,000 worth of stock. This proposition being acceptable to Gollos, appellant gave him a check of Finance for $47,500 and Gollos, Kemble, and a representative of the Blue Diamond Company took it to a bank for deposit. The bank, however, would not receive it, and asked for a cashier's check. The check was left with the institution, and the party returned to appellant, who promised Gollos that he should have a cashier's check the next day. This promise was kept, and the cashier's check was forthwith lodged with the bank for deposit, the institution returning the check of Finance first tendered to it. Gollos then handed to Kemble a cashier's check for $2,500 and his promissory note for $500. Gollos testified that these two items of paper were to cover "this bonus," evidently referring to what is above called a discount on the loan for which he had asked. He also testified that he signed a contract for the purchase of $20,000 worth of the stock which he was to buy, at the suggestion of appellant, as a condition for the making of the loan to him. Some time later, according to Gollos, he again saw appellant and Kemble, at the request of the latter, and appellant told him that the Blue Diamond Company had claimed that the payment of the $2,500 as a bonus was a usurious transaction, and asked if Gollos were willing to have the amount applied upon the "$20,000 purchase of stock," to which proposition Gollos assented. Gollos also said that after this understanding he issued to appellant a trust deed for $25,000 "for the" contract, by which he had agreed to purchase $20,000 worth of stock. He testified also that, because of the attitude said to have been assumed by the Blue Diamond Company, appellant was to give him a credit of $3,000, that as far as he knew he was allowed that credit on the books of Finance, and that he was told by Kemble and appellant that the credit had been given him.

Kemble took the witness stand immediately after Gollos had left it. He testified that the latter had come to him for the purpose of discounting a note signed by the Blue Diamond Company and indorsed by Gollos, and not for the purpose of borrowing money; that Gollos neither applied for nor received a loan of money from appellant; that the note was discounted by the Discount Corporation of California; that Finance indorsed the paper below the indorsement of Gollos, whereupon the Discount Corporation issued its check payable to Finance, for $47,500, and Finance made its check in the same amount, payable to the Blue Diamond Company; that this check was then taken to a bank, which held some escrow in which Gollos was interested, but the bank declined to receive it, asking for a cashier's check in the same amount, and that Finance later supplied it; that the bank required the cashier's check because Gollos was immediately to receive some money out of the escrow and the bank would not pay against any check other than a cashier's check; that, when "this check" (the record does not show which) was taken to the bank, the party which went there consisted of Kemble, Gollos, and a representative of the Blue Diamond Company; that before Gollos received his money from the bank there was a conversation in appellant's office to the effect that Gollos was to buy a certain number of shares of the stock of Finance; that "inasmuch as the transaction was between Mr. Gollos and the Lasker Finance Company and the Discount Corporation of California, and that the discount paid by Mr. Gollos was to go in its entirety to the Discount Corporation of California, there was no consideration for the handling of that note, so it was suggested to Mr. Gollos that if he would purchase $20,000 worth of stock in the Lasker Finance Corporation he would endeavor to have this note discounted by another finance company, which Mr. Gollos agreed to do, but stated that the only way that we could pay for it was by issuing his note in the amount of $20,000 and to pay the note out of funds which he had coming to him within the next 30 or 60 or 90 days, I forget just the time"; that Gollos then agreed to purchase the $20,000 worth of stock, the stock to be delivered when Gollos paid his note for that amount; that Gollos gave Kemble a check for $2,500, which the latter delivered to the Discount Corporation; that Kemble was not present when Gollos gave any note for $500, but that appellant told Kemble, after the giving of the $2,500 check, that he had given Gollos a credit of $3,000 on the note executed for the purpose of buying the stock, saying the credit was given because "there was some talk about usurious interest charge in connection with the note," and that an objection to that effect was made by the Blue Diamond Company in the form of a refusal to pay the Discount Corporation; that he (Kemble) never authorized appellant to charge his account with $3,000 and give credit to Gollos for that amount, but that appellant "told me that he was going to hold my commission in the transaction for the $3,000," and that he never got any commission; that it first came to his attention five or six months after the discounting of "this note" that his account on Finance's books was charged $3,000, and that he then made objection to the charge to appellant; that thereupon appellant said that he had arranged to credit Kemble's account $3,000, and that he (Kemble) understood that this credit had been entered.

The record also shows the following while Kemble was on the witness stand:

"[Q.] I will ask you to state what you said to Mr. Lasker when you first approached him on the subject of charging your account $3,000? * * * A. I asked Mr. Lasker why he had charged my account with $3,000. * * * He stated that there was some claim made in connection with a usury charge and that he had charged my account $3,000, and credited Mr. Gollos' account on his note $3,000.

"Q. Did he say anything about the Discount Corporation, to whom you paid the $2,500? A. I don't recall that he did."

The witness was then shown a statement which he had made to the district attorney, after which the record shows:

"[Q.] Now, * * * does that refresh your recollection as to what he wished to show by your charge of $3,000? A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what it was? A. $2,500 was the discount paid to the Discount Corporation of California; $500 was a note given by Gollos to me, I believe it was—I am not sure of that—which the Discount Corporation also was to get that note of $500, which they turned back to me in lieu of a commission on the transaction. So the $2,500 and the $500 made up the $3,000 which was ultimately charged to my account."

Kemble further testified that he indorsed the $500 note, turned it over to appellant, and "told him at that time that the broker who brought Mr. Gollos into the office * * * was due a commission on the transaction, and that I had been given the note to take care of those things, and turned the note over to Mr. Lasker," that appellant insisted upon having the note, and that he reminded appellant three or four times about his being charged with $3,000 on the books of Finance.

"[Q.] What did he say to you the second time that you reminded him of that fact, that you wished to be credited or have the books straightened out in regard to your account? A. He said it would be done.

"Q. Well, it wasn't done, was it? A. Well. I don't know just when it was done. I understand it has been done."

Kemble also testified that he again called appellant's attention to the matter some days afterward, and appellant said, "I would get credit for the $3,000." Turning to another matter, he testified, in response to a question as to how he came to meet Gollos: "I believe Mr. Lanfield came into the office, and Mr. Lasker introduced me to Mr. Gollos through Mr. Lanfield"; that after his first interview with Gollos he "told Mr. Lasker that Mr. Gollos had a note of $47,500 which he wished to discount, and as he offered to discount it for $3,000, and Mr. Lasker instructed me to say to Mr. Gollos that we could not handle it ourselves as a company, but we would endeavor to have it discounted elsewhere; that later appellant told him that, if Gollos would purchase $20,000 worth of the stock of Finance,

"we would" arrange the discounting of the note; that, the Discount Company having required it, he (appellant) would guarantee the note; that appellant told him to convey this information to Gollos, and that he did so. Kemble testified on recross-examination that he was to have a commission of $3,000 for the sale of the $20,000 worth of stock to Gollos, but that the commission was not payable until the stock was paid for, and that it never was paid for.

The witness Warshaw testified that soon after the Gollos affair appellant told him "that he was afraid something would be started by the Blue Diamond Company regarding the Gollos original transaction due to usury and it would be best that something be done about it. The result of it was he told me to credit the Gollos contract, the Gollos note, with the amount of $3,000 and charge that amount to W. H. Kemble," and that accordingly he (the witness) made out the journal entry to cover the matter, and it was copied in the books by a bookkeeper. Some time later, according to Warshaw, he asked appellant whether Kemble "intended to pay this amount of money," and respondent answered that he didn't think so, that "it would be charged off later," and that it was finally charged off "to an account called Commercial Credit of California"; that the concern so named "was a corporation that acted as a fiscal agency for" Finance; that there was no record of the amount ever having been paid, either by Kemble or by the corporation named; that the stock sold to Gollos was appellant's personal stock; that the note evidencing the sale was sold by appellant to Finance; and that he received a credit of $20,500 for it. Warshaw also testified that, as Gollos never paid for the stock he had purchased, it was later sold to some one else, and the amount that had been charged to Gollos was later charged off. Warshaw further testified: "When Mr. Lasker requested that Mr. Kemble's account be credited with $3,000 a charge had to be made somewhere for that amount and * * * it was made in a sum total of $10,000 to the Pacific Service Corporation bond account. * * * The $3,000 was included in this large charge of $10,000 * * * and the explanation is [on the books]: 'To charge the Pacific Service Corporation bond account with losses sustained by Commercial Credit of California and on W. H. Kemble'; that appellant directed the entries to be made; that Pacific Service Corporation "is a corporation the entire issue of which was owned by" Finance; that the bond account of that corporation "was an account where we charged all interest charged on loans over and above 12 per cent. interest," and "if we had losses on contracts we would ultimately charge it to" that bond account; that he believed there "was some sort of an agreement" between the Pacific Service Corporation and Finance whereby the former insured Finance "against loss on collection on its contracts"; that he had "seen the letter that was written in that regard"; that "this item was only one of a great number of items whereby the Pacific Service Corporation was charged by losses sustained by" Finance; and that wherever possible "all losses on all contracts" of Finance "were charged to the bond account" of the other corporation.

Warshaw also testified without objection that there was no transaction between Kemble and appellant when the former was charged with $3,000 and none when he was given credit for that amount; that "it" was just a book entry. He testified further: "When the Pacific Service Corporation was formed they made up a form of a bond, and every time we would make a loan, and let us say the interest was $25 and the charge was $50, we would take in $25 of the interest into our interest account and $25 we would credit to the Pacific Service Corporation bond account. In time, of course, there would be an accumulation of moneys there. And if we sustained a loss on automobiles" Finance "would charge the Pacific Service Corporation bond account."

We have now concluded our examination of the more than five hundred pages of the record to which appellant directs our attention in his presentation of the point that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict under the second, third, fourth, and fifth counts of the indictment. We have stated all the evidence directly bearing upon the question except items of it which are merely cumulative.

[6] We are satisfied that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict under the second count of the indictment. We need not tarry to state the conclusion we have tentatively reached—nor the views which seem to sustain it—as to the truth or falsity of the item showing a credit of $3,000 on the note of Gollos, for the reason that the testimony on that matter is complex and somewhat varied, and requires both time and space for its discussion. The necessity for the labor is obviated by the fact that there can be no dispute that the charge against Kemble in a like amount was utterly false. The entry was made upon the basis of no transaction whatever with him. This circumstance is ample to support the verdict, without reference to the status of the item showing the credit upon the Gollos note.

The question as to the sanctity of the verdict under the third, fourth, and fifth counts requires no extended treatment, and those counts may be disposed of together. The items referred to in them were all entered for the purpose of clearing up and closing out Appeal and error — 1011(1) — Review — Findings — Conflicting testimony — Adverse possession.

Judgment, supported by fact findings as to adverse possession on conflicting testimony sufficient to support them, will be affirmed (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 323, 325).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William Hazlett, Judge.

Action by James T. Dunn against William J. Farrow and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, named defendant and certain other defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Rupert B. Turnbull, of Los Angeles, for appellant Bates.

William T. Kendrick and Victor H. Kendrick, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of respondent in an action to quiet title to certain real property. Respondent (the plaintiff) claimed title both by deed and by adverse possession. Appellants Helen T. Peairs and C. S. Bates have not filed any brief. The other appellants have presented an opening brief containing 332 pages, but nowhere therein is any point directly stated or set out for our consideration as a point presented for reversal of the judgment. No attempt has been made to comply with rule VIII of this court, which rule is, in part, as follows: "The briefs must present each point separately, under an appropriate heading, showing the nature of the question to be presented." We assume, however, that appellants have intended throughout said 332 pages to contend that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings or the judgment based on said findings, but their contentions are without specifying any particular or particulars in which the evidence is insufficient.

Respondent went into possession of the land in 1892, under a quitclaim deed executed and recorded after the execution, but before the recordation of a deed under which (by mesne conveyances) appellants claim. About 1912 appellant William J. Farrow purchased the property from the grantee of the the chimerical Kemble transaction. As that transaction had no existence, the latter items were false entries. It may be, under the arrangement existing between Finance and Pacific Service Corporation and Commercial Credit of California, although we do not so decide, that in a sense there was a transaction behind those items. The books showed a charge against Kemble, whether just or unjust, and it was known that the item would never be paid by him. If this state of affairs, as a showing on the books, allowed mere entries under the arrangement mentioned, as a matter of bookkeeping, appellant is not protected by the cases we have cited at the inception of the treatment of these questions. As to those later entries, that is, the ones made to clear away the illicit Kemble charge, the assertion of appellant that there was no evidence to prove that the items referred to in the second, third, fourth, and fifth counts were false cannot be justified. The evidence shows, without dispute, whatever may appear merely upon the pages of the books cast up under the arrangement in question, that the items specified in the third, fourth, and fifth counts were wholly false. Kemble never owed Finance $3,000. Therefore he was not bound to pay it. Finance lost nothing when he did not pay it. There was, therefore, of course, no loss which could be charged successively against Pacific Service Corporation and Commercial Credit of California. After a reading of the evidence, these points seem too clear for further argument.

Appellant assails certain instructions given by the trial judge to the jury. After the review of the evidence which we have presented, these questions may be treated with brevity. It is said, whether correctly or not we do not pause to consider, that some of the instructions assumed that the entries set forth in the indictment were false. If that be true, the matter is of no moment, for the jury could not possibly have found that they were not false, nor that appellant was not aware of their falsity, nor that he did not participate in making them. Considering the discussion appearing in earlier portions of this opinion, it is unnecessary to mention other minor points made against the instructions. It is to be understood that in nothing we have said do we condemn the instructions as actually given by the judge.

One or two other points are made by appellant, but they do not appear to be of sufficient merit to require a specific consideration.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

deed above mentioned as having been executed before and recorded after the execution of the quitclaim deed under which respondent claims.

The testimony is conflicting, but is sufficient to support the findings of fact as made by the trial court relating to adverse possession by the plaintiff.

The findings are sufficient to support the judgment on adverse possession by the plaintiff under both sections 323 and 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Payment Ⓒ21 — Check — Sufficiency.

Check does not extinguish debt in absence of agreement.

2. Bills and notes Ⓒ334 — Holder — Notice of infirmity — Time of notice.

Transferee of check who agreed to cancel payee's debt if check was paid was not holder in due course as to amount of such debt where payment of check was refused and transferee received notice of fraud (Civ. Code, § 3135).

Civ. Code, § 3135, provides transferee receiving notice of any infirmity in instrument before he has paid the full amount agreed to be paid therefor will be deemed a holder in due course only to the extent of the amount theretofore paid.

3. Bills and notes Ⓒ452(4) — Holder — Notice of infirmity — Evidence of fraud.

Evidence of fraud held admissible in action on check by transferee who received notice of infirmity before paying full consideration (Civ. Code, § 3135).

Nichols, Cooper & Hickson, of Pomona, for respondent.

NORTON, Justice pro tem.

This is an action to recover the amount of a check made by the appellant and delivered to the defendant Oakes, who transferred it the same day to the respondent. The defendant pleaded fraud and want of consideration as a defense to the action, and that the respondent took with notice of his equities. Oakes, the assignee of the check, was owing respondent the sum of $805.75, which was evidenced by two promissory notes and secured by a chattel mortgage of Oakes to one Caplan and assigned to respondent. The check given by appellant was for $1,500, and represented partial payment for the crop of oranges then growing on Oakes' ranch. The same day that Oakes received the check from appellant he transferred it to respondent. The respondent paid him the sum of $694.25, being the difference between what Oakes then owed the respondent and the principal amount of the check, and agreed that if the check was paid by the bank upon which it was drawn respondent would cancel Oakes' debt to it. The check was duly presented to the bank, and payment was refused. Upon the same day that payment of the check was stopped, appellant notified the respondent of the fraud, and that the Stewart Fruit Company had a mortgage on the crop, and that he received no consideration for the check. At the time of the trial Oakes' note and security were still in the possession of respondent, and had not been canceled by it.

[1] The weight of authority supports the rule that where a note is taken for a pre-existing debt it does not operate as payment unless there is an express agreement to that effect, and, where there is no such agreement, the original debt is not discharged and the creditor may sue upon it. Merchants' National Bank v. Bentel, 166 Cal. 473, 137 P. 25; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Church, 81 N. Y. 218, 37 Am. Rep. 494; Dresser v. Mo. & Iowa Ry. Con. Co., 93 U. S. 92, 23 L. Ed. 815. This rule applies where a check is taken and unless it is agreed at the time the check is indorsed it shall constitute payment it does not operate as such, and the debt for which it is given is not extinguished. Pacific Acceptance Corp. v. Goodman, 72 Cal. App. 147, 236 P. 964.

[2] In this case, the facts disclose no such agreement between Oakes and respondents upon the transfer of the check, and the conduct of the indorsee indicates that the understanding was otherwise. The purchase price was the payment of the money received by Oakes upon the transfer to the respondent.

and the cancellation of his debt to it, which last portion of the agreement remained unperformed. Upon principle, the respondent is no different from an indorsee who has agreed to pay the consideration for a note in partial payments.

It follows from what has been said that the respondent, having received notice of infirmities in the check before the performance of the residue of his contract of purchase, was not a holder in due course as to the amount of the pre-existing debt due it from Oakes at the time it received the check involved (Civ. Code, § 3135), and the finding of the trial court to this effect is not supported by the evidence.

[3] Appellant upon the trial sought to show that the check was obtained by Oakes from it through fraud, and that it received no consideration for it. Objections to this evidence upon the ground it was immaterial were sustained. The appellant under the state of the case should have been permitted to introduce the evidence. It appeared from plaintiff's evidence that, at the time it was notified that payment of the check had been refused, it was notified by appellant that Oakes had a defective title to the check, and at that time part of the consideration had not passed from it and, as to this residue of its contract, respondent was not a holder in due course and the burden was upon appellant to show fraud in the inception of the check.

Judgment reversed.

1. Witnesses ⇨372(2) — Cross-examination — Interest of witness — Bias or prejudice.

Cross-examination of defense witness preliminary to showing of interest and relation to other parties and bias or prejudice, if any, was proper.

The witness testifying in a prosecution for bribery was cross-examined relative to how long he had known the person alleged to have bribed defendant, and as to having ever visited a bathhouse run by such person, after previous testimony that such bathhouse was a blind for bootlegging business.

2. Criminal law ⇨1036(2) — Objections — Cross-examination — Availability on appeal.

Objection to cross-examination in order to be available on appeal must be urged in trial court.

3. Witnesses ⇨372(2) — Cross-examination — Acceptance of ring.

Cross-examination of defense witness in prosecution for bribery as to his having received ring from person claimed to have given bribe, was proper.

4. Witnesses ⇨363(2) — Witnesses — Cross-examination.

District attorney's cross-examination of witness for prosecution to show prejudice against district attorney's office held erroneous.

5. Criminal law ⇨369(1) — Separate offense — Evidence.

Joseph L. Fainer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and W. R. Augustine, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J.

The defendant was indicted for bribery; tried and convicted of the offense, and appeals from the judgment pronounced upon the verdict and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The first reason assigned by the appellant for a reversal of the judgment is that the court erred in permitting certain cross-examination of a police officer. The defense endeavored to establish an alibi, and evidence was introduced to show that appellant had been working in another part of the city of Los Angeles on the evening in question; that about 11 o'clock in the evening, according to his own testimony, he made an arrest, returned to the station and dictated a report. The bribery is supposed to have occurred before midnight. When the officer was called by defense counsel he was asked to identify the report, which he did, testifying that he remembered its being dictated by the appellant. On cross-examination the witness was asked how long he had known McDonald, the person alleged to have bribed the appellant by giving him between $600 and $700. An objection to this question was properly overruled for the reason that it was preliminary to a showing of the interest and relation of the witness to the other parties, and his bias or prejudice, if any. He was likewise asked if he had ever visited a bathhouse run by McDonald, it having been previously testified that this particular bathhouse was a "blind" for "bootlegging" business. A similar objection was for the same reason properly disallowed. The witness then answered that he had been at the bathhouse three or four times. Thereupon the following occurred:

(A deputy district attorney): "Q. Mr. McDonald made you a present of the ring that you have on your left hand, didn't he?"

"A. He did.

"Q. When?"

"A. I don't know when it was; a year or two ago.

"Q. What was his business then?"

"A. I couldn't say. He had this bathhouse.

"Q. Is that the ring you have on your left hand now?"

"A. Yes sir."

(Deputy district attorney): "Q. May that be offered in evidence, if your Honor please?"

"The court: Very well.

"Defense counsel: If your Honor please, what?"

"Deputy district attorney: 'The ring.'"

"Defense counsel: We will object to it, as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and having nothing to do with the issues of this case.

"Deputy district attorney: Shows the interest of this witness.

"Defense counsel: I can't see where it could possibly have any connection with this case.

"The court: Well, possibly it might show interest, Mr. ——. Don't you think counsel have a right to show interest of the witness in any case?"

"Defense counsel: Well, I can't see it, your Honor. That is all right, though.

"The court: Overruled."

The ring was received as an exhibit with the statement by the court that it would be returned later to the witness.

[2, 3] It is earnestly urged by appellant that the examination we have just quoted exceeded the bonds of legitimate cross-examination. It is to be observed, however, at the outset, that counsel failed to object on the ground that it was not proper cross-examination. The books abound with declarations to the effect that the objection must be urged in the trial court before it may be availed of on appeal. Again, it is to be noticed that the evidence, with the exception of the ring itself, was all introduced without objection of any kind. The ring could hardly add any injury to what had preceded its physical introduction. Aside from these two factors, however, it is a fundamental rule of cross-examination that the motive of a witness arising from interest, relationship, bias or prejudice may be shown. It can hardly be doubted that if the witness had accepted a ring from a known "bootlegger" he would unconsciously, perhaps, be inclined to excuse another who had accepted money. At least it was proper for the trial judge in the exercise of his discretion to permit the jury to consider the relationship for the purpose of determining the weight to be given his testimony. People v. Wong Toy, 189 Cal. 587, 209 P. 543; 27 Cal. Jur. § 97.

[4] The next assault upon the judgment can best be stated by saying that the district attorney was permitted by the court to cross-examine one of the witnesses for the prosecution. McDonald testified on his direct examination that on the night of October 5, 1926, one David Morgan, his next door neighbor, drove him from his home at 129 West Fifty-Second street to 4119 Woodlawn avenue, the place where he said the bribery took place. David Morgan was called to the stand, apparently for the purpose of corroborating the accusing witness. In response to a query concerning his whereabouts on the night in question, the witness stated that he had no recollection. Thereupon the district attorney asked him if he knew a Mr. Ledbetter, which was answered in the affirmative without an objection being interposed by defense counsel. Without objection he also testified that he had talked with Mr. Ledbetter in the courtroom on the day he was called to the stand. He was then asked to relate the subject of the talk. Over a general objection that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, he was obliged to state that he asked Ledbetter if the district attorney had a right to send for him that day and the day before. The district attorney then queried "you refused to come down and talk with us," to which the witness replied "Yes sir." The witness was next asked "was that because Mr. Ledbetter told you not to." To the general objection defense counsel added the ground that it was "cross-examination of his" (district attorney's) "own witness." The objection was overruled. The witness answered "No." Then there follows further cross-examination along the same line. The district attorney was undoubtedly able to create the impression before the jury that the reason the witness did not corroborate the testimony of McDonald was because he was for some reason prejudiced against the district attorney's office. True, defense counsel did not at first interpose the proper objection, but, in view of the fact that he finally succeeded, the court should have recognized the error and sustained the objection. The district attorney was, very patently, cross-examining his own witness without any showing to indicate a right to so proceed. Whether there was prejudicial error in the action will be considered in a later paragraph.

[5] We now come to the most serious question in the case. It is insisted by appellant that the court erred in receiving evidence of another offense separate from the one for which the appellant was being tried. While the witness McDonald was being cross-examined with reference to what the appellant did with the money at the time it was handed to him, and where he went immediately thereafter, he was asked the question: "Where did you see him the last time you saw him?" It is apparent from the questions immediately preceding and following the one asked that the examiner intended to direct his query to the night in question. The witness, however, replied: "The last time I saw him I paid him for guarding my plant. He worked for me." Counsel immediately disclaimed a desire to inquire about any other time than the occasion of the alleged bribery. On redirect examination, the district attorney was permitted, over the objection of the defense, to establish that in December, 1928, or more than two years subsequent to the commission of the offense for which the appellant was on trial, he had been paid $200 for guarding the liquor of the witness for a period of ten days, or, in other words, that the appellant had assisted him in carrying on an illicit trade in liquor. The testimony was permitted on the theory, and as the jury were instructed, for the sole purpose of tending to prove guilty intent, motive, identity of plan, or guilty knowledge on the part of the appellant. It must be remembered that on the evening of October 5, 1926, the appellant, according to the testimony of McDonald, asked the latter if his plant was worth $750; that after receiving between $600 and $700 he departed, and on the following day the liquor was moved from 4119 Woodlawn avenue to a new location. It should also be assumed that while the appellant was guarding the liquor in 1928 he was doing so as an officer, i. e., clothed in the garb and with the apparent authority of a policeman. He was at the time a member of the police department. We now inquire what the second offense proved. Did it prove motive or guilty knowledge? Can there be any doubt concerning the motive of an officer of the law who accepts $600 or more from a "bootlegger"? The acceptance of such a sum from such a source can hardly be said to be an equivocal act. In People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 83 P. 43, 46, we read: "When some distinct offense is so connected with the crime charged in the indictment that proof of the former, in connection with other evidence, would sustain a probable inference of guilt as to the latter, such distinct offense may be proved, as, for instance, to show a motive on the part of defendant to commit the crime charged, or the intent with which an equivocal act has been done, such as passing a counterfeit bill, or receiving stolen goods. The general rule and its exceptions are very elaborately discussed in the opinion of Justice Werner in the celebrated case of People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 290, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L. R. A. 193, where many of the principal authorities are cited. The result of the discussion, I think, may be summed up in the proposition that evidence which is relevant to any material fact in issue in a criminal case cannot be excluded because it may prejudice the defendant by proving him guilty of other crimes than that for which he is on trial." (Italics ours.) Can it be said that the testimony was relevant to the issue of guilty knowledge, i. e., whether the payor was in fact a "bootlegger"? In the opening statement of counsel for the defense, he said that he intended to prove that as early as January 7, 1926, the appellant and other officers had raided McDonald's plant at 6021 South San Pedro street. While this statement is not evidence, nevertheless it indicated that counsel did not intend to rely upon the fact that appellant did not know the business of his accuser, but rather upon proof tending to establish that he did not accept the money. In appellant's own examination he confessed his knowledge of the reputation of McDonald. Guilty knowledge, as we have used that term, was, therefore, not in issue, and it cannot be said that evidence of a separate offense was relevant thereto.

Nor do we perceive how, aside from the fact that the recital of the facts constituting the separate offense would tend to create the impression that appellant was possessed of a corruptible mind, the testimony tended in any degree to prove design or plan. We may observe, as was done in People v. Glass, 158 Cal. 650, 112 P. 281, 294, that "in the everyday affairs of life, if it should be established to the satisfaction of a jury that upon another and distinct occasion a defendant had offered or solicited a bribe, it would have great weight with a jury in determining whether in the instance charged he had been guilty of the offense. It would establish, at least, that he was the sort of man who would be willing to do this criminal act. Such was the line of reason and argument here employed. Yet such matters are never legal evidence. In discussing precisely such a case, where evidence had been admitted against the defendant charged with bribery, of a former act of like character, the court of appeals of New York says: 'The mental ability and disposition of the defendant to commit a crime of this sort, while it might persuade a jury, raises no legal presumption. * * * Yet the inference drawn by the prosecuting officer, and permitted by the court, left it for the jury to say that the desire of Sharp, manifested by the offer of a bribe in one instance, was the same desire which led to the actual giving of a bribe in the other; hence that the two crimes had the same origin. * * * It was put in near the beginning of the trial, and the impression then made must have continued with the jury, and in their minds colored and deepened, if it did not distort, the subsequent evidence. It did indeed cast a dark shadow upon the defendant's character. It not only tended very strongly to prove the defendant guilty; it was absolute proof, but it was of a different crime from that charged. It was offered and received directly on the main issue, and was of great and persuasive force against him. Such evidence is uniformly condemned, as tending to draw away the minds of the jurors from the real point on which their verdict is sought, and to excite prejudice, and to mislead them. It was improperly received, and the exception to its admission well taken.' People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 1 Am. St. Rep. 851, 14 N. E. 319."

There is another reason, which, when taken into consideration for the purpose of determining the admissibility of this testimony, makes it apparent that the court committed error. The testimony relating to the offense in 1928 was related by the same witness who testified to the bribery in 1926. McDonald was the only witness to the second episode—with the possible exception that the woman from whom McDonald rented the property on Compton avenue stated that McDonald came to her house with two "tall, heavy, broad shouldered men" in plain clothes and that the appellant in his size resembled one of the men, but that she didn't "remember his face exactly." On account of the unsatisfactory identification, if it can be called identification, and the fact that no incriminating circumstances are connected with her testimony, makes it entirely proper for us to say that McDonald was the sole witness to the evidence complained of. What possible weight could it lend to his other testimony? Its only effect was to arouse and influence the mind of the jury against appellant. An almost identical situation, in this regard, was before the court of appeals of New York, in People v. Harvey, 235 N. Y. 282, 139 N. E. 268, 273, and it was there said: "It is difficult to see how witnesses who have testified to paying money as a bribe could add credence to their story by stating that they had later sold to the defendant a stolen car. One story of crime is not strengthened by relating another when both come from the mouth of the same witness. * * * The influence which such testimony would have upon the minds of a jury would be to lead them to think that, if Harvey had committed all these offenses, or agreed to commit them, he must have been guilty of the crime charged. This is not a legitimate use of such evidence, as a man cannot be found guilty of one crime by proving that he has committed others." Nor was the error cured by the attempt of the trial judge to confine its effect to certain issues. Not being relevant to any issue it should not have been admitted at all.

We deem it unnecessary to go to a lengthy résumé of the testimony adduced to determine whether the errors found to have been committed require a reversal of the judgment under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. The appellant relied, as has been indicated, upon his denial that he accepted any money, plus the establishment by a number of witnesses of an alibi. To say the least, the state of the evidence, as we read it, renders the case a doubtful one. Indeed, the testimony improperly admitted may well have been the cause for the verdict of the jury in this case.

Judgment and order reversed.

DENOVAN v. GOLDEN STATE WOOLEN MILLS et al.★
Civ. 7274.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 15, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 14, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 12, 1930.

1. Corporations ⇨80(11) — Stock purchase — Misrepresentations — Rescission.

Evidence sustained finding of fraud inducing plaintiff to purchase corporate stock under contract sought to be rescinded.

Plaintiff claiming to have been defrauded in stock purchase was authorized representative of Australian firm to sell wool in America. The president of defendant corporation engaged in operating woolen mill represented to plaintiff that, if plaintiff would purchase block of stock in corporation, it would be in position to consider purchasing wool from plaintiff. He further stated that corporation was in act of floating bond issue and preferred stock issue, and that purchase moneys were to go into corporate treasury. The corporation did not receive the money and was in no better position to buy wool from plaintiff than it was before plaintiff purchased the stock.

2. Cancellation of instruments ⇨45 — Injury — Rescission — Extent of injury.

Plaintiff, if proving material injury, is entitled to rescind contract without proving extent of injury.

3. Cancellation of instruments ⇨47 — Rescission — Material injury — Misrepresentations.

Plaintiff purchasing stock on misrepresentation that other stock was paid for in cash, and that corporation would buy plaintiff's wool, showed material injury necessary to rescission.

4. Corporations ⇨80(9) — Stock purchaser — Examination of account — Misrepresentations.

Prospective purchaser of stock in corporation need not make expert examination of corporate accounts to determine misrepresentations.

5. Corporations ⇨80(10) — Stock purchase — Rescission — Fraud — Laches.

Plaintiff suing to rescind stock purchase, two months after discovering fraud and less than month after giving notice of rescission, held not guilty of laches.

The evidence to show laches disclosed that the plaintiff purchased the stock September 22, 1922, and the court found that he discovered the alleged fraud on April 14, 1925, and gave notice of rescission on May 8, 1925, and brought action to rescind June 28, 1925. Plaintiff alleged that he discovered the fraud by reason of report of an expert who examined the books of the corporation, and that the evidence claimed to show that plaintiff discovered facts which put him on inquiry was addressed to fact that business of corporation did not prosper, and not to issue when plaintiff made, or by exercise of ordinary care should have made, discovery that he had been defrauded.

6. Assignments ⇨22 — Stock purchase — Rescission — Notice — Assignment.

After notice of rescission by purchasers of stock, each had complete cause of action which was assignable under statute (Civ. Code §§ 953, 954).

7. Assignments ⇨119 — Stock purchased — Assignment — Rescission by assignee.

Plaintiff purchasing stock for himself and members of family under contract made by himself, and receiving assignments from members of family, could sue for rescission.

8. Fraud ⇨28 — Misrepresentation — Stock purchased — Cash sale.

Misrepresentation that stock theretofore issued had been paid for in cash at 90 per cent. of par value, inducing purchase, held actionable fraud.

9. Corporations ⇨80(2) — Misrepresentation — Joint liability — Acts of president.

Corporation participating in all transactions in manner directed by its president held jointly and severally liable with president for misrepresentation of president.

10. Contracts ⇨94(3) — Misrepresentations — Intent — Issue.

Intent is issue in action to rescind contract for misrepresentation under statute (Civ. Code § 1689, subd. 1 and § 1572, subd. 1).

11. Appeal and error ⇨1050(2) — Harmless error — Immaterial evidence — Laches.

Rights of defendants held not prejudiced by admission of immaterial evidence on issue of laches, otherwise supported by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William Hazlett, Judge.

Action by Alexander Denovan against the Golden State Woolen Mills and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Newby & Newby, of Los Angeles (Dee Holder, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Hewlings Mumper and Meserve, Mumper, Hughes & Robertson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J.

The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to obtain a decree rescinding a contract of purchase of 3,333 shares of the capital stock of the defendant corporation. The defendants answered, and a trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and, from a judgment entered thereon, the defendants have appealed and have brought up a bill of exceptions.

[1] 1. The defendants claim that the material findings on the allegations of fraud were not sustained by the evidence. Among other things, the following facts stand out prominently: Prior to the time the plaintiff made his purchase the defendant corporation was a going concern operating a woolen mill near Los Angeles and had been operating the mill for some time. The plaintiff had recently left Australia and had taken up a residence at Riverside. He was the authorized representative of certain firms in Australia to sell wool in this country. He met Mr. C. B. Eyer, president of the defendant corporation. They had talks about the plaintiff selling to the defendant some Australian wools. At first Mr. Eyer stated that the corporation had a full supply. Later he stated that the corporation needed moneys and suggested that if the plaintiff would purchase a block of stock, that then and in that event the corporation would be in a position to consider purchasing wool from the plaintiff. Furthermore, he stated that the corporation was in the act of floating a bond issue of $300,000 and a block of preferred stock in the sum of $150,000. Mr. Eyer and the plaintiff had many talks on these subjects. Counsel have indulged in much argument as to whether Mr. Eyer represented that he was selling treasury stock. However, it is admitted that he stated the purchase moneys were to go into the corporate treasury. In this connection the defendants assert with vigor that the moneys did go into the treasury, and therefore there was no misrepresentation. The plaintiff replies such act was a mere subterfuge to make it appear on the face of the books that the terms of plaintiff's contract had been complied with. In this connection he shows that the defendants caused a number of entries regarding those moneys to be made in the books of the corporation, but the plaintiff's payments did not stop until the moneys so paid were in the pockets of Mr. Eyer, and that the corporation was not a dollar richer after the transaction had been completed. Continuing, the plaintiff argues that thereafter the corporation was in no better position to buy wool from the plaintiff than it was before the plaintiff purchased the stock, and that the very object of the plaintiff's purchase was defeated. He shows that he was placed in the position of having purchased shares in a failing concern without even obtaining the benefit of his contributions. In this connection, the defendants frankly state in their brief that the stock which was actually sold to the plaintiff was some of the stock which had been sold to Mr. Eyer and his associates before the plaintiff became a stockholder. While it may be conceded that the evidence is conflicting, it is certain that there is an abundance of evidence in the record to sustain the findings made by the trial court on the allegations of fraud.

[2, 3] 2. The defendants next assert that it is neither alleged nor proved that the plaintiff suffered any damage by reason of the defendants' purported fraud. The plaintiff makes two replies, either of which is sufficient. Drawing attention to the fact that this is an action in rescission, he asserts that he was not bound to allege nor prove specific damages. Munson v. Fishburn, 183 Cal. 206, 216, 217, 190 P. 808. If he proved material injury he was entitled to rescind. That the facts which we have recited, if true, showed material injury to the plaintiff is patent. In an action for rescission he was not bound to prove the extent of the injury. 12 Cal. Jur. 766.

[4, 5] 3. The defendants claim the plaintiff was guilty of laches; in other words, he should have discovered, and in fact did discover, the facts which he now alleges long prior to the commencement of the action. The stock was purchased September 22, 1922. The plaintiff alleges he did not discover the fraud until May 1, 1925, and that the discovery was made at that time by reason of the report of an expert, who examined the books of the defendant corporation. The notice of rescission was given on May 8, 1925. This action was filed June 28, 1925. The trial court made findings that are very full and complete on these particular subjects. It found that the plaintiff discovered the alleged fraud on April 14, 1925. All other facts were found as stated by the plaintiff. As to what the plaintiff should have discovered, the defendants assert that the facts appeared on the face of the books of the corporation, and after the plaintiff became a stockholder he should have examined those books. The claim is not well founded. The transaction was so conducted that it would have taken an expert examination of all the accounts, including the accounts with each individual stockholder, to disclose the facts complained of by the plaintiff. No such duty rested on a prospective purchaser of stock in the corporation.

Turning to the assertion that the plaintiff did make a discovery earlier than as found by the trial court, the defendants quote certain written communications and call our attention to certain declarations of the plaintiff. Thereupon, they assert, that soon after the plaintiff purchased his stock he discovered facts which put him on inquiry. The plaintiff freely concedes the presence in the record of the evidence just adverted to, but contends that no part or portion of that evidence involved fraud or even the purchase of corporate stock. He asserts that all of such evidence was addressed to the fact that the business of the corporation did not prosper, and that the plaintiff was dissatisfied with the business management. None of this evidence was addressed to the issue of when the plaintiff made, or by the exercise of ordinary care should have made, a discovery that he had been defrauded. As stated above, the trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff. It may be conceded that the evidence was conflicting on the issue under discussion, but we are entirely unable to say that there is not evidence in the record which sustains the findings in favor of the plaintiff on the issue of discovery.

[6, 7] 4. The next point made by the defendants is that the plaintiff cannot, under any view of the case, recover for more than the 33 shares sold to him personally. The stock in suit was bought by the plaintiff acting for himself and the several members of his family. It was issued 1,500 shares to Mary Denovan, 1,500 shares to Marion Denovan, 300 shares to Ronald Denovan, and 33 shares to the plaintiff personally. The notice of rescission was signed by each and every one of them and by their attorney. After the notice of rescission had been given, the other members of the family assigned their interests to the plaintiff and he commenced the action. After the notice of rescission had been duly given, each holder had a complete cause of action. Such complete cause of action was assignable (Civ. Code, §§ 953 and 954; Wikstrom v. Yolo Fliers' Club [Cal. Sup.] 274 P. 959), and was duly assigned. Moreover, as this plaintiff was the person with whom, and in whose name, the contract of purchase was made for the benefit of himself and the members of his family, above named, he was entitled to maintain the action and to take all steps in the nature of performing all conditions precedent and then to commence and maintain the action. Lauer v. Williams, 32 Cal. App. 590, 594, 163 P. 687.

[8] 5. It is claimed by the defendants that the alleged misrepresentation, that all of the stock which had theretofore been issued had been paid for in cash at 90 per cent. of the par value thereof, is not actionable fraud. This contention they argue at length. The same and many additional arguments have been made in the past. However, the decisions are against the contention. 26 C. J. 1228, notes 6-10; Munson v. Fishburn, 183 Cal. 206, 212-214, 190 P. 808. No authority to the contrary is cited by defendants.

[9] 6. They assert that it was clearly error for the court to adjudge that the defendant corporation is jointly and severally liable with the defendant Eyer for the purported misrepresentation of the latter. There are many answers to the point. The first one is that the point was never called to the attention of the trial court. The defendants interposed a joint demurrer. It was so framed that, if the complaint contained one good count, then it was properly overruled. It did not purport to charge that there was a misjoinder of parties defendant. In arguing this point the defendants assert that under the doctrine of respondeat superior the defendant corporation was not liable. If the corporation had interposed a separate demurrer, the point could have been placed before the trial court, but the corporation did not do so. Counsel do not cite any part of the record showing that the point under discussion was ever presented to the trial court. However, we think the defendants will not even contend that the corporation was not a proper party, even though it was not a necessary party; furthermore, that they will not contend that a joint and several judgment against a corporation and a natural person is never proper. As appears from what we have said above there is no finding of the trial court that is not sustained by the evidence. The defendants do not point to a fact that is absent in the proof as against either of the defendants. The point is reduced, therefore, to the question, "Was the liability, several or joint and several?" By his complaint the plaintiff charged the corporation and C. B. Eyer jointly. The allegation which he used throughout was that "the defendants" did the acts alleged. There was evidence supporting that allegation in that form, in other words, that they acted together. The evidence showed that the corporation did all things in the manner directed by, and in the interest of, the defendant Eyer and fully participated with him in all transactions. The artificial person and the natural person under such facts were jointly and severally liable. 14a C. J., p. 775, note 67; 27 C. J., p. 27, notes 43-45; 20 Cal. Jur. 510, § 20; 38 Cyc. 488.

[10] 7. The trial court admitted, over the objection of the defendants, evidence of a similar sale to Utters. The defendants concede that such evidence is admissible to prove intent. But they say intent is not material in an action as for rescission, and they cite Giovannoni v. Bartmann, 59 Cal. App. 651, 657, 658, 211 P. 844. That case does not so hold. It but follows section 1568 of the Civil Code. The case of the plaintiff rested on Civil Code, § 1689, subd. 1, and section 1572, subd. 1. It is statutory law that intent is an issue in such a case.

[11] 8. The plaintiff was formerly a resident of Australia and came to California a few months before the negotiations arose which gave rise to this action. While on the stand, over the objection of the defendants, he was allowed to state that under the law of Australia when stock is transferred the signature of the transferee must be placed on the old certificate. The plaintiff argues that such fact was admissible on the issue of laches. If it was not, the most that can be said is that it was immaterial. But, if there was material evidence supporting the court's finding on that issue (and we have shown there was), the rights of the defendants were not prejudiced by the admission of some immaterial evidence addressed to that same subject. We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

GUNDRY et al. v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F.
RY. CO.
Civ. 95.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

March 28, 1930.

1. Railroads ⚡327(7) — Truck — Contributory negligence — Evidence.

Driver of heavily loaded truck and trailer hit by train at crossing held contributorily negligent for failing to stop though he saw approaching train.

Truck driver before crossing tracks saw train and was able to stop before reaching tracks but did not; his truck was heavily loaded and it was difficult to increase speed. Engineer did not see truck until train was a few feet away and, according to driver's testimony, it was impossible to see truck.

2. Railroads ⚡327(1) — Crossing — Automobile — Duty — Stop — Look — Listen.

Automobilist approaching railroad tracks has duty not only to look and listen and, if necessary to stop, but to heed what he sees.

3. Railroads ⚡330(2) — Contributory negligence — Crossing — Watchman — Absence — Apparent danger.

That watchman was absent from crossing held not to relieve truck driver, who knew watchman was usually there, from duty of looking for approaching trains.

4. Negligence ⚡119(6) — Contributory negligence — Pleading — Answer — Complaint — Evidence.

Defense of contributory negligence was available though not pleaded in answer where contributory negligence appeared from allegations of complaint or from plaintiff's evidence.

5. Railroads ⚡335(3) — Warning — Crossing — Necessity — Apparent danger.

That train did not ring bell was immaterial where truck driver approaching crossing saw train.

6. Railroads ⚡312(13) — Crossing — Engineer — Failure to see truck — Inference — Negligence.

Negligence held not inferable from mere fact engineer of train could not see truck approaching crossing.

The evidence disclosed that engineer was seated on right side of engine in cab about twenty-five feet from front of engine, and that he could not see truck until it suddenly appeared in front of him, not over thirteen to fifteen feet away.

7. Railroads ⚡338 — Last clear chance — Actual knowledge.

Last clear chance doctrine required actual knowledge of truck driver's dangerous position on crossing by locomotive engineer.

8. Trial ⚡333 — Verdict — Responsiveness — Amount.

Verdict attempting generally to somewhat equalize financial conditions cannot be sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Robert B. Lambert, Judge.

Action by F. J. Gundry and another against the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railway Company. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Robert Brennan, M. W. Reed, Leo E. Sievert, H. K. Lockwood, and E. T. Lucey, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Brittan & Brittan, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

BARNARD, Acting P. J.

This is an appeal from a judgment based upon the verdict of a jury, and from an order denying a new trial.

The action arose out of a collision between a locomotive operated by the defendant and a truck and trailer operated by one McCormac, who was driving the same for the plaintiffs. The collision occurred in the city of Bakersfield on October 31, 1926. Plaintiffs alleged negligence in the following language:

"That at said time and place, as aforesaid, the defendants did negligently, carelessly, and without due regard for the safety of others, operate, propel, and drive an engine into, and so as to collide with the trailer operated by these plaintiffs, thereby destroying, breaking and damaging said trailer to the extent of and to the plaintiffs' damage in the sum of $553.60."

The complaint also demanded $35 as the reasonable rental value of the trailer for fourteen days. The answer of the defendant denied all of the material allegations of the complaint.

[1] The undisputed facts are: That the defendant has three standard gauge railroad tracks across F street, in the city of Bakersfield; that F street is paved, is about fifty-five or sixty feet wide from curb to curb, with ten additional feet on each side for sidewalks, and the crossing is level; that at the time of the collision the weather was clear, the sun shining, the street dry, and the truck was in good condition and functioning properly; that the truck driver was approaching the railroad tracks from the north; that the engine pulling one car was west of F street and moving easterly on the third or most southerly track; that when the truck driver was at a point ten feet or so north of the north track, and from sixty to seventy feet from the point of collision, he saw the locomotive approaching from the west, being then about three hundred feet away; that the truck driver proceeded across the track, increasing his speed as he went; and that he succeeded in clearing the last track with his truck, but the rear end of the trailer was hit by the engine and damaged. The driver of the truck testified as follows:

"I came into town with a truck, a twelve or twelve and a half ton truck and I turned off Sixteenth street to the left down to the south on F street toward the Santa Fé railroad and I made the boulevard stop, and it is necessary to shift down into low gear, and I proceeded down F street to the tracks and as I approached the tracks I was going rather slow and as I came upon the tracks there was no sign of any train coming from either direction or any watchman out there as I was accustomed to seeing; that is the way I always go home; I have lived out that way for a long time; and as I got close to the north track there I saw a switch engine with one car behind it coming from the west approximately a block away and there was no signal and no watchman out there on duty. I glanced over at the little house where the watchman stays and I noticed the stop signal standing down there where it always stands when he is in the house, and the bell was not ringing, and I had been accustomed to seeing the switch engine come down there and stop there and stop and switch on to another track, and I supposed that is what they were going to do at this time.

"Mr. Lucey: I object, your Honor, to what he supposed, and ask that that portion of his answer may go out.

"The Court: What he supposed can go out.

"A. (Continuing): I started on the track and the engine just kept coming and I shifted into second gear; after I was out on the tracks I had to go ahead, and I went into second gear and got up as much speed as I could and just as I crossed,— the front end of my truck cleared the last tracks, so I could look down and see the engineer, why I noticed he jumped like he was going to apply the brakes, and then he was far enough away so he could see my trailer and then he settled back in his comfortable position like he thought everything was all clear, and my trailer at that time was now on the last track and he just kept coming and just before he struck the trailer, why he appeared to apply the brakes but he could not stop. He hit the back end of the trailer and pushed it off the track. I guess he went about ten feet after he struck it."

This witness also testified that he was proceeding near the center of F street, and that as he crossed the last track so he could see the engineer, the front part of the engine was approximately fifty or sixty feet away. In reference to this time, he gave the following testimony:

"Q. And he was about that distance when you saw him jump forward in his cab of the engine? A. Yes.

"Q. Now at that point could you have speeded up the speed of your truck and trailer? A. No more than I did, no sir, because I had a big load and you can't pick up a load of that size very fast."

He further testified that when he first saw the engine it was about three hundred feet away, near a switch which was located at that point, and that he did not hear any whistle or bell; that after the accident he talked to the watchman, who stated he had gone into the depot at the time of the accident; that he had been acquainted with this particular crossing and railroad tracks since 1919, and had lived out that way since 1921, and crossed at that point sometimes five or six times a day; that he could have seen the locomotive a few yards north of the point where he did see it; that he was traveling in low gear when he first saw the engine, at the rate of between four and seven miles an hour; that he had a load of nine tons; and that traveling at that rate of speed he could stop his truck and trailer in from five to ten feet. He also testified: "Q. How close were you to the south track on which the engine moved across 'F' street when you increased your speed of your truck? A. Well, I increased all the way across, that is I tried to as much as I could; as soon as I got on the tracks"; that he traveled probably sixty or seventy feet from the time he first saw the engine until it hit the trailer; and that he increased the speed of his truck from low to second gear when he was about on the first or north track, and the truck was going possibly eight or ten miles an hour when it was hit. Also, "Q. If you had wanted to stop your truck instead of speeding up you could have stopped your truck could you not before you got to the southerly track? A. I would have had to stop on another track." And also: "Q. What caused you to look to see what the engineer was doing? A. I was wondering why he did not stop."

The plaintiffs called the engineer who was in charge of the locomotive in question, who testified that he was going from eight to ten miles an hour and that he could stop the engine in probably fifty or sixty feet, at that rate of speed; that he first saw the truck when it came across in front of him, at which time he was from eight to ten feet away. Plaintiffs also called as a witness a lady who came up to the same crossing in an automobile driven by her husband, just prior to the accident. She testified that as they came up to the tracks on the north side, she saw an engine about fifty feet west of the crossing, which she thought was standing still; that they were going to cross the track, but just as they got almost to the north track, she saw the engine steam up and start forward, and she told her husband to stop, which he did; that the first time she saw the truck and trailer, the front part of the truck was on the south rail of the south track; that the trailer did not clear the track and the engine hit it, stopping just after the impact; that she did not hear any bell or whistle or other warning; and that she thought the engine was going not to exceed ten miles an hour. She admitted having made a previous statement to the effect that she could not say whether or not the engine bell was ringing. In talking about the truck and trailer, she testified as follows:

"Q. You did not follow it down F street? A. No I did not see it until it was on the tracks.

"Q. And that happened in a flash of a second? A. It seemed to me it was more than second because I sat there and hoped the truck would get across before the engine hit it.

"Q. Would you say it was four or five seconds? A. It was not very long, but it seemed a long time."

At the close of the plaintiffs' case, the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which motion was denied. We think this motion should have been granted, as the evidence for the plaintiffs, taken in its most favorable light, shows contributory negligence on the part of the driver of the truck, as a matter of law. In Chrissinger v. Southern Pacific Company, 169 Cal. at page 624, 149 P. 175, 177, the court says:

"A person approaching a railway track, which is itself a warning of danger, must take advantage of every reasonable opportunity to look and listen. Undoubtedly the question of contributory negligence or freedom from it is ordinarily one for the jury, but where, as here, the standard of conduct is so obvious as to be applicable to all persons, and the plaintiff has failed to measure up to that standard under the circumstances shown, he is not entitled to have his case go to the jury. Hamlin v. Pacific Electric Co., 150 Cal. 779, 89 P. 1169."

In that case, the court held that the plaintiff's testimony that he looked and listened, but did not see or hear, is not enough to support a verdict in his favor, where the circumstances and conditions were such as to make it plain that by looking and listening he must have observed the approach of the train. The circumstances of the present case are even stronger, since the truck driver actually saw the approach of the engine and car and disregarded the same. The truck driver testified that he was familiar with the crossing in question; that after he saw the engine approaching he speeded up his heavily loaded truck as much as he could; that he could have stopped within five or ten feet, although this would have compelled him to stop upon other tracks, there being no evidence that any other engines or trains were approaching; that he looked up at the last moment because he wondered why the engineer did not stop the engine; and he also testified as follows:

"Q. Did you keep your eye on the engine all the time up to the time of the collision?

A. Why, no, I guess I watched my truck part of the time.

"Q. Well, where was the engine the second time you noticed it? A. I don't suppose my eye was off it more than a fraction of a second at a time."

[2] The plaintiffs' evidence indicates that the truck driver tried to beat the locomotive over the crossing, but, whether or not this was his original purpose, the law places upon him a very definite duty to look and listen and to stop, if necessary, in order to make sure that he may proceed on his way with safety. Not only is it his duty to look and listen, as has been held in countless cases, but where one actually sees the approaching danger, thus close at hand, it is incumbent upon him to take warning from what he does see. A traveler is bound to look and listen, and, if necessary, to stop, and that obligation is increased rather than diminished by his knowledge that a train is approaching. Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 182 Cal. at page 378, 190 P. 36. This would seem to be especially true in this case, where the great weight of his load and the slow speed possible with the truck in low and intermediate gears made such a contest particularly dangerous. The fact that from the beginning he increased his speed, and as he says, "got up as much speed as I could," shows that he realized the danger. It would be little short of ridiculous to hold that the law requires a traveler to look and listen, and even to stop, if necessary, at a railroad crossing, in order to ascertain if a train is approaching, but does not require such a traveler to refrain from attempting to cross in front of the train, when he actually sees it approaching. The United States Supreme Court, in the case of Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Goodman, 275 U. S. 66, 48 S. Ct. 24, 25, 72 L. Ed. 167, 56 A. L. R. 645, said:

"When a man goes upon a railroad track he knows that he goes to a place where he will be killed if a train comes upon him before he is clear of the track. He knows that he must stop for the train not the train stop for him."

Respondents argue as follows:

"If it were possible, * * * that the truck driver could have seen the engine coming, to the crossing, it is just as sure that the engineer and fireman could see the truck driver going across the crossing. In other words, each of them stand on the same footing as to their seeing the other cross the tracks."

While there may be some difference in the rules of law and their application to the operation of railroads outside of cities, and those covering their operation across city streets, no such rule as is here contended for exists anywhere. The duty was upon the driver of this truck, not only to look and listen, but to heed what he saw. Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., 192 Cal. 357, 219 P. 992; Chrissinger v. Southern Pacific Co. supra. In paying no attention to what he saw, the driver of the truck was guilty of contributory negligence. Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 189 Cal. 746, 210 P. 259; Griffin v. San Pedro, etc., Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 P. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842; Jones v. Southern Pacific Co., 34 Cal. App. 629, 168 P. 586; Thompson v. Southern Pacific Co., 31 Cal. App. 567, 161 P. 21. In Murray v. Southern Pacific Co., 177 Cal. at page 6, 169 P. 675, 676, the court says:

"The general rule applicable to negligence cases may be stated to be: That, even when there is no conflict in the evidence, negligence is a question of fact for the jury, if different conclusions upon the matter can rationally be drawn from the evidence (Fernandes v. Sacramento, etc., R. R. Co., 52 Cal. 45; McKeever v. Market St. R. R. Co., 59 Cal. 294; Chidester v. Consolidated D. Co., 59 Cal. 197; House v. Meyer, 100 Cal. 592, 35 P. 308); but, if but one conclusion can reasonably be reached from the evidence, it is a question of law for the court."

[3] The respondents contend that no negligence may be charged to the driver of the truck, because he was familiar with the crossing, knew that a watchman was usually there, and that he was justified in assuming from the absence of the watchman that no train was approaching. They rely upon the following quotation from Gregg v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 193 Cal. 212, 223 P. 553, 557:

"It is true, as has often been stated, that a railroad crossing is itself a place of danger and is an effectual warning of danger which must always be heeded, and the exercise of ordinary care in traveling over such place is not excused by the negligent omission of the railroad company itself to exercise reasonable care. But it is also true that a railway company will not be permitted to encourage the public to relax its vigil as to the dangers that lurk in railroad crossings by assurances that the danger has been removed or minimized by the adoption of safety devices and measures and at the same time hold a person to the same quantum of care as if no such safety measures had been provided."

The answer to this is that no matter what he might otherwise have been entitled to assume, he actually saw the engine and car approaching, and, while constantly watching it, attempted to cross in front of it. In the case just quoted from, the Supreme Court uses this language:

"We do not here hold that one who blindly attempts to cross a steam railroad track, whether the crossing be guarded or unguarded, and by reason of such negligence is injured by being hit by a passing train, has a cause of action against the railroad company. The law casts upon every one the duty of exercising such care as is commensurate with the situation."

The driver of the truck had neither the right to assume that the engine would not cross the street, nor the right to attempt to cross directly in front of and while watching the approaching train. A very brief pause, after seeing the danger, would have avoided the injury complained of.

[4] The respondents insist that, whether or not the driver of the truck was guilty of contributory negligence, the matter is immaterial, and is not available as a defense, for the reason that contributory negligence was not alleged in the answer of defendant. In the case of Hoffman v. Southern Pacific Co., 84 Cal. App. at page 346, 258 P. 397, 400, the court says:

"As a general rule the contributory negligence of the plaintiff must be specially pleaded by the defendant in order that he may rely upon this defense. 19 Cal. Jur. 681, § 104. But where plaintiff's contributory negligence appears from the allegations of his complaint or from the evidence introduced in his behalf, this plea is available to the defense, although it is not pleaded in the answer. 19 Cal. Jur., p. 681, § 104, p. 697, § 119; 20 R. O. L. 182, § 151; 20 Standard Enc. of Proc. 317; Green v. Southern Pacific Co., 132 Cal. 254, 64 P. 255; Kenny v. Kennedy, 9 Cal. App. 350, 99 P. 384."

We think that contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiffs conclusively appears from their own evidence, and that this prevents a recovery by them, even though the same was not specially pleaded. In this connection, it may be observed that the record shows that considerable evidence was introduced by the defendant, without objection, going to the fact that the driver of the truck was negligent. If it be assumed that the case should have gone to the jury, the court correctly instructed the jury on the subject of contributory negligence. Hoffman v. Southern Pacific Co., supra. We think, however, the evidence does not sustain the jury's finding that plaintiffs were free from such negligence.

[5, 6] The only claim of negligence on the part of the defendant is that no warning was given, with perhaps an inference of negligence from the fact that the engineer did not sooner see the truck. The evidence is conflicting as to whether any warning was given by bell or whistle. For the purpose of this decision, we must assume that no such warning was given. This is entirely immaterial, however, since the only possible purpose in giving such a warning would be to attract the attention of the driver of the truck. That he actually saw the engine approaching makes the failure to give such a warning immaterial. The evidence shows the engineer was seated on the right side of the engine; that his seat in the cab was about twenty-five feet from the front of the engine, and that he could not see the truck until it suddenly appeared in front of him, not over thirteen to fifteen feet away. That the engineer could not see the truck is borne out by the testimony of the driver of the truck, who says, he himself, although he was watching the engine all of the time, was not able to see the engineer until just as his truck cleared the south track. Under such circumstances, negligence could not be inferred from the mere fact that the engineer did not see the approaching truck. Nor did the fact that a watchman was not on duty at the crossing at that particular moment relieve the plaintiff from his duty to look and to be governed by what he saw. Hutson v. Southern California Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 701, 89 P. 1093; Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 P. 651; Koch v. Southern California Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 677, 84 P. 176, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 521, 113 Am. St. Rep. 332, 7 Ann. Cas. 795; Heitman v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 10 Cal. App. 397, 102 P. 15.

[7] Appellant contends that the court committed prejudicial error in giving the jury instructions on the last clear chance doctrine. The court instructed the jury as follows:

"You are instructed that if you find in this case that the plaintiffs' agent had been negligent and the plaintiffs' trailer was, as alleged in the complaint, in front of the train driven by the defendant and the plaintiffs' agent could not extricate himself therefrom by the exercise of reasonable care, and the defendant had actual knowledge of the plaintiffs' dangerous position, under the last clear chance doctrine heretofore defined to you, it is the duty of the defendant, if you find it was able by the use of ordinary care to avoid the accident, and if by the use of the ordinary care it failed to avoid said accident and you find this to be true in accordance with the other instructions heretofore given and by a preponderance of the evidence, I instruct you that your verdict should be for the plaintiffs." (Italics ours.)

There was absolutely no evidence in the record under which the jury could have found that the defendant had actual knowledge of the plaintiff's dangerous position in time to have avoided the accident. If the jury's verdict is based upon the instructions as to this doctrine, it is not supported by the evidence. In the case of Bagwill v. Pacific Electric Company, 90 Cal. App. 114, 265 P. 517, 519, the court says in reference to this doctrine: "The words mean exactly as they indicate, namely, last clear chance, not possible chance."

[8] The only evidence as to the amount of damages shows that the trailer was damaged to the amount of $553.60, and that the loss of the use of the trailer amounted to $35, or a total of $588.60. The jury brought in a verdict for $500. While the defendant cannot ordinarily complain that the verdict is for an amount less than it might have been, if there is any evidence at all to sustain the verdict, a verdict may not be sustained which attempts generally to somewhat equalize financial conditions. Driscoll v. Market Street Railway Co., 97 Cal. 553, 32 P. 591, 33 Am. St. Rep. 203. That would appear to have been the purpose of the jury, in this case, as the record contains no evidence to justify placing the damages at such an amount.

For the reasons herein set forth, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: MARKS, J.; STROTHER, Justice pro tem.

SCHAEFER v. UNITED BANK & TRUST CO.
OF CALIFORNIA et al.★

Civ. 4025.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 21, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 19, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 19, 1930.

1. Specific performance ⇨1 — Equitable cognizance.

Specific performance actions are wholly of equitable cognizance.

2. Jury ⇨14(13) — Specific performance — Right to jury.

Where main purpose of action was to compel performance of agreement relating to issue of stock in corporation, jury trial was properly denied.

The main purpose of the action was to compel specific performance of agreement of stockholders of corporations made upon their merger authorizing new corporation formed, upon delivery to it of stock of old corporation, to issue to holders thereof certain stock of new corporation and grant them the right to purchase additional stock, and this brought the action within equitable jurisdiction of court. The plaintiff contended, however, that answer raising a question as to whether or not there had been sale of part of stock to third party raised question of law which should have been tried by jury.

3. Jury ⇨12(1) — Right to jury — Common law.

It is not error to deny jury in case where such right is not granted at common law.

4. Jury ⇨13(1) — Right to jury trial — Equity.

Where case as made by pleadings involves application of doctrines of equity and granting of relief obtainable only in equity, parties are not entitled to jury trial.

5. Jury ⇨13(5) — Right to jury — Legal issues incidental.

There is no right to trial by jury, where legal issues are merely incidental to relief sought in suit in equity.

6. Jury ⇨13(1) — Equity — Trial of issues.

Where court of equity has jurisdiction of main action, general jury trial of all issues cannot be demanded.

7. Specific performance ⇨12(3)—Issue of stock — Sufficiency of evidence.

In suit to compel performance of agreement for issue of stock of new corporation for stock of old corporation, evidence held sufficient to support finding plaintiff had sold his stock.

8. Corporations ⇨116 — Sale of stock — Validity.

Stockholder having sold stock, and price having been paid to agent, fact he did not sign draft drawn on buyer did not affect validity of sale.

9. Frauds, statute of ⇨89(1) — Parol contract — Statute of frauds — Acceptance by purchaser — Effect.

Acceptance of goods under parol contract within statute of frauds, when made, relates back to and operates upon contract so as to validate it as of date entered into (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 4).

10. Frauds, statute of ⇨139(1) — Executed oral agreement.

Statute of frauds has no application to executed oral agreement of sale (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 4).

11. Specific performance ⇨134 — Costs — Against plaintiff.

Where plaintiff was denied relief in action to compel specific performance of agreement relating to issuance of stock, court properly awarded costs against plaintiff (Code Civ. Proc. § 1025).

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; James W. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by Henry Schaefer against the United Bank & Trust Company of California and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Busick & Leeper, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond, of Sacramento, for respondents.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem.

This case was tried by the court without a jury, the court denying appellant's request for a jury. Judgment was rendered in favor of respondents, and from the judgment appellant has appealed.

In substance the facts are as follows: In the spring of 1927, two corporations, the United Bank & Trust Company of California and the French-American Bank were merged under the name of United Bank & Trust Company. At the time of this merger it was agreed by the stockholders of the two corporations first named that upon the surrender to the United Bank & Trust Company of the stock of the United Bank & Trust Company of California the stockholders so surrendering their stock should receive from the new corporation 1.6 shares of its shares of stock for each share of stock so surrendered with the additional right to purchase for $87.50 one share of the stock of the new corporation for each 4 shares of stock so surrendered, the right to make this purchase expiring on October 10, 1927. Appellant owned two blocks of the stock of the United Bank & Trust Company of California, one block being for 67½ shares, and the other being for 202½ shares, the latter block not being involved in this litigation. On August 29, 1927, appellant deposited with the Sacramento branch of the United Bank & Trust Company certificate No. 1677 for said block of 67½ shares of said stock for the purpose of having reissued to him shares of stock of said last-named corporation to which he was entitled, upon the surrender of this certificate as aforesaid, and thereupon the said bank delivered to appellant its receipt for said certificate, and this certificate was forwarded to its San Francisco branch.

At this time respondent Peck was the vice president of the Sacramento branch of said United Bank & Trust Company, and he testified that on August 30, 1927, he telephoned appellant that he had received an offer of $170 a share from Brandenburg & Co., a San Francisco brokerage firm, for said 67½ shares of stock; that on August 31, 1927, appellant called on Peck at the bank and asked him what the market price of said stock was on that day. Peck replied that he did not know, but at appellant's request he called up Brandenburg & Co. over the long-distance telephone and was informed by a Mr. Upton, a member of said firm, that $170 per share was the best the market afforded. Peck repeated this information to appellant and appellant then said, "Tell him he can have it for $175 per share," and in response to this Upton said "all right it is sold." And Peck thereupon informed appellant of the acceptance of this offer. The following day Peck received a letter from Brandenburg & Co. confirming the sale, and directing that the delivery of the stock be made through the Pacific National Bank of San Francisco, the purchase price of said stock to be paid upon the receipt by that bank of the receipt delivered to appellant by the United Bank & Trust Company, when he deposited with it his said stock.

On September 8th appellant brought the said receipt to Peck at the bank and delivered the same to him, signing an indorsement thereon to the effect that he thereby sold, assigned, and set over unto the Pacific National Bank of San Francisco all his right, title, and interest in the certificate for the 67½ shares of stock, and authorized the new stock to be issued per its order. This receipt so indorsed was attached to a draft for $11,812.50 and forwarded by the said Sacramento branch of the United Bank & Trust Company to the Pacific National Bank, with instructions to deliver it to Brandenburg & Co. upon receipt of said sum of $11,812.50.

The Pacific National Bank, upon receiving the said receipt, draft, and instructions, notified Brandenburg & Co. that it held this collection. Mr. Upton of Brandenburg & Co. called on said bank and informed it that he desired the certificate for the 67½ shares before paying the draft. He and Mr. Kellman, who represented this bank, then called on the United Bank & Trust Company at San Francisco and requested of Mr. Everard, who was in charge of the stock transfers of this bank, the delivery of the said certificate. This Everard refused to do, without further order from Peck. He thereupon called Peck on the telephone and requested authority for so doing. Peck assured him that appellant would give the authority and Everard then delivered the said certificate of stock to Kellman, who, in turn, upon payment of the said sum of $11,812.50, delivered the said certificate to Upton. On this same date Peck mailed to the Pacific National Bank written authorization from appellant to the United Bank & Trust Company, at San Francisco, to deliver said certificate to the Pacific National Bank. This last-mentioned bank remitted the said sum of $11,812.50, received by it upon the surrender of said certificate, as aforesaid, to the United Bank & Trust Company at Sacramento, and said last-named bank deposited it to the credit of appellant and so informed him.

Appellant contends that the trial court erred in refusing him the right to have the case tried by a jury.

Summarized, the complaint alleges that appellant was the owner of a certificate of stock covering 67½ shares, that the corporation which had issued the stock had been merged with another corporation and a new corporation formed, that by reason of this merger, upon surrendering this certificate to the new corporation, he became, by agreement of the stockholders of said corporation, entitled to have stock of the new corporation issued to him in the ratio of 1.6 of the stock of the new corporation for each share of the old corporation so surrendered, and, in addition, was given the privilege of buying at $87.50 per share, one share of the new corporation for each four shares of the old corporation surrendered; that he surrendered his said certificate for 67½ shares in the old corporation to the new corporation for the purpose of having the new corporation issue its said stock to him and to enable him to purchase shares of the new corporation, as aforesaid, but that respondents Peck and Yates, who were the vice presidents of the new corporation, conspired with two unknown persons to confiscate appellant's said certificate, and by means of said conspiracy caused the new corporation to deliver the said certificate to them; that appellant has demanded of respondents the return to him of said certificate, but that they have refused to do so, and that he has demanded of both the old and the new corporation that they issue and deliver to him 108 shares of the stock of the new corporation, with the right to purchase 27 additional shares of said stock at $87.50 per share, which they have also refused to do; that since the surrender of said certificate, the value of the stock in both of said corporations has greatly increased, so that a money judgment would not adequately compensate appellant for the injuries and damages he has received, and that it is necessary to fully compensate him that he have specific performance of said agreement. He asks judgment that he be declared to be the owner of said certificate of stock for the 67½ shares, and that none of respondents have any right, title, or interest therein, that he is entitled to have 108 shares of the stock of the new corporation issued to him and have the right to purchase an additional 27 shares at $87.50 per share, and that the court direct each of said respondents to issue to appellant said stock in said new corporation and permit him to purchase 27 additional shares of stock at $87.50 per share in lieu of the old stock.

Respondent Pacific National Bank answered denying, on information and belief, all the allegations of the complaint, except that the United Bank & Trust Company was a corporation and disclaimed any interest in the subject matter of the action. The other respondents answered, in substance, that appellant had sold and assigned the certificate of stock involved in this action to Brandenburg & Co., and that prior to the commencement of this action, and subsequent to the sale of same, the United Bank & Trust Company had issued to the purchaser a new certificate therefor, and also denied the alleged conspiracy and fraud alleged in the complaint.

Section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that actions for the recovery of specific real or personal property, with or without damages, or for money claimed as due upon contract, or as damages for breach of contract, or for injuries, must be tried by a jury. In other cases issues of fact must be tried by the court.

This is not an action for the recovery of specific personal property, nor is it an action for damages, growing out of any breach of contract, or for injuries sustained by appellant. It appears from an examination of the complaint, and of the relief therein sought, that it is an action for specific performance.

[1] Actions to enforce specific performance were not recognized at common law. 23 Cal. Jur. 413. Such actions are wholly of equitable cognizance. Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, 55 P. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Rockhill v. Parker, 22 Cal. App. 367, 134 P. 720. Pomeroy in his work on Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 4, § 1412, says: "Cases frequently arise where corporations refuse to recognize the rights of assignees of stock, and make the transfers on their books, and issue new certificates in place of the old ones presented, or where certificates have been presented to the company without the owner's consent and negligence, and new certificates have been issued instead thereof to others purporting to be entitled thereto. In such cases it is well settled that although the law may give some remedy, as that of damages, for the refusal, equity has jurisdiction to compel the corporation to make the transfer and issue new certificates in the one case, to the lawful assignee, and in the other, to decree that the corporation replace the stock upon its books and issue new certificates to the original owner, or if it is unable to do this by reason of its not having or being able to procure any shares, to pay the value of the stock."

[2] Appellant maintains that the answer of respondents, other than that of Pacific National Bank, raised a question of law which should have been tried by a jury, that is to say, the question as to whether or not there had been a sale of said stock by appellant to Brandenburg & Co.

The main purpose of this action was to compel the specific performance of the agreement of the stockholders of the United Bank & Trust Company of California and the French-American Bank, made upon their merger, authorizing the new corporation formed by such merger, to wit, the United Bank & Trust Company, upon delivery to it of stock of the United Bank & Trust Company of California, to issue to the holders thereof certain stock of said new corporation and grant them the right to purchase additional stock, as hereinbefore set forth. This clearly brought the action within the equitable jurisdiction of the court.

[3-5] It is well settled in this state that it is not error to deny a jury in any case, where such right is not granted at common law. Pomeroy v. Collins, 198 Cal. 46, 243 P. 657. Where the case, as made by the pleadings, involves the application of the doctrines of equity and the granting of relief which can be obtained in a court of equity, and not elsewhere, the parties are not entitled to a jury trial. Fish v. Benson, 71 Cal. 428, 12 P. 454; Ballou v. Avery, 175 Cal. 642, 166 P. 1003. There is no right to a trial by jury, where the legal issues are merely incidental to the relief sought. 15 Cal. Jur. 337. The case of Reiner v. Schroeder, 146 Cal. 411, 80 P. 517, relied upon by appellant, is not in point. In that case, the only essential controversy was whether or not defendant had wrongfully ousted plaintiff from possession of certain mining property, and therefore the action was one for the recovery of specific real property. Holland v. Kelly, 177 Cal. 43, 169 P. 1000.

[6] Where the court, as a court of equity, has jurisdiction of the main action, a general jury trial of all the issues cannot be demanded. Mesenburg v. Dunn, 125 Cal. 222, 57 P. 887.

We are of the opinion that the court did not err in denying the appellant a trial by jury.

Appellant says that the main point for decision in this case is whether or not appellant sold the stock in controversy. The trial court found that on or about September 1, 1927, appellant sold to Brandenburg & Co. the shares of stock in controversy, and that, pursuant to instructions from Brandenburg & Co. to close the sale of said stock through the Pacific National Bank, appellant executed a written assignment and transfer of said stock to said Pacific National Bank, and as part of the transaction of September 12, 1927, the appellant, in writing, authorized and directed the United Bank & Trust Company, having possession of said certificate of stock, to deliver the same to the Pacific National Bank, and that, pursuant thereto, the United Bank & Trust Company did deliver it to the Pacific National Bank, for the use and benefit of Brandenburg & Co., the purchaser of said stock, and did collect and receive for the benefit of plaintiff the purchase price thereof, to wit, $11,812.50, which sum the United Bank & Trust Company, prior to the commencement of this action, offered to pay to appellant and renewed such offer in open court at the trial of this case.

[7] Appellant contends that the evidence does not support the finding that there was a sale of the stock. Peck testified that on August 30, 1927, he had a conversation with appellant over the telephone in which he informed appellant that he had received an offer from Brandenburg & Co., offering $170 a share for appellant's small block of stock, the one for 67½ shares, and to think the offer over, and decide what he would do and to let him know the next day. The next day appellant called on Peck. He asked Peck how the market was. Peck told him he did not know. Appellant then asked Peck to call up and find out. Peck then called up Brandenburg & Co. over the long-distance telephone and talked with Upton, a member of that company. Upton told Peck that the top price for the stock was $170 per share, which information Peck communicated to appellant. Appellant then said to Peck, "You tell him he can have it for $175.00 a share." Peck then said to Upton, "You can have the stock for $175.00 a share." And thereupon Upton said, "Alright, it is a sale. We will take the stock." Peck then said to appellant, "Your stock is sold, they will accept your offer." At that time Peck told appellant that he was talking to Brandenburg & Co. Peck then told appellant to bring in his receipt for the stock, and he would forward it and use it to collect his money for him. Appellant brought the receipt to Peck at the bank on September 8, 1927. During the interval between August 31 and September 8 Peck called appellant on the telephone two or three times and requested him to bring in the receipt, as Brandenburg & Co. were anxious to get the stock to close up their business transactions.

On September 8 appellant brought his receipt to Peck. Becker, an employee of the Sacramento branch of the United Bank & Trust Company, testified that, when appellant brought the said receipt to the bank on September 8, he and Peck had some conversation, then appellant and Peck came to his desk and Peck dictated the assignment that was placed on the back of the receipt. Appellant signed this, and Becker then drew a draft on Brandenburg & Co. for the purchase price of the stock and told appellant to sign it. Becker was then called to another part of the bank and left the receipt and draft on his desk and did not return for an hour. When he returned to his desk appellant was gone. He did not notice whether or not appellant's name appeared on the draft. He took the receipt and draft to another employee of the bank named Sullivan and directed him to send the receipt and draft to the Pacific National Bank through the mail, and this Sullivan did. Sullivan testified that appellant's name was signed to the draft when it was delivered to him. With the draft and receipt Sullivan inclosed a collection letter with instruction to deliver document only on payment of the draft. The court found that said draft had not been signed by appellant. Peck testified that he never at any time told appellant that the Pacific National Bank had purchased the stock, and he further testified that the reason why the indorsement on the receipt was in favor of that bank was because Brandenburg & Co. had, in their letter of August 31 confirming the sale of the stock, requested that the matter be closed through this bank.

On September 20, 1927, appellant wrote a letter to the United Bank & Trust Company at San Francisco, in which he said: "On September 8, 1927, I endorsed this receipt to the Pacific National Bank of San Francisco and left with the United Bank and Trust Company of Sacramento with instructions to deliver same upon receipt for me of the sum of $175.00 for each of the 67½ shares. It is my understanding of the transaction that you were to act as my agent in the selling of the stock and that no actual sale took place. I did not intend to make any sale of the stock to you. You were not to make delivery until you received the money. However, if any sale did take place, I hereby rescind same on the ground of your failure to pay me for the stock and there was no consideration at all for my endorsing the receipt for the stock to you. I hereby revoke your agency to sell said stock and demand that you return the receipt for the stock to me."

While there is a conflict in the evidence, nevertheless there was substantial evidence that appellant knew that Brandenburg & Co. had made the offer to purchase his said stock, that they accepted his offer to sell the same, and that between the 31st day of August and the 8th of September they were insisting that the sale be completed by the surrender of the receipt.

There is no evidence that the Pacific National Bank made any offer for or negotiated for the stock, or desired at any time to purchase the same. On the contrary, it appears that the only connection this bank had with the transaction was to receive the receipt from the United Bank & Trust Company and deliver it upon payment of the purchase price. That this was the extent of the interest which the Pacific National Bank had in this matter is strengthened by the statement in appellant's letter of September 21, in which he stated that he endorsed the receipt to this bank with instructions to deliver the same upon receipt for him of the $175 for each of the 67½ shares.

We are of the opinion that there was substantial evidence supporting the finding of the court that there was a sale of the stock, and that the firm of Brandenburg & Co. was the purchaser.

[8] Appellant, having made a sale of his stock, and the purchase price having been paid to his agent, it appears to the court that the fact that he did not sign the aforesaid draft drawn upon Brandenburg & Co. did not in any wise affect the validity of said sale.

[9, 10] Appellant claims that the agreement entered into between appellant and Brandenburg & Co. on August 31, 1927, not being in writing, was invalid under the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which requires an agreement for the sale of goods and chattels and things in action, at a price of not less than $200, to be in writing, unless the buyer receives part of the goods or things or pays at the time some part of the purchase money. In this case, however, the buyer did receive the property sold, and did pay the purchase price. The delivery to and acceptance by the purchaser of goods under a parol contract of purchase and sale, which was within the statute of frauds when made, relates back to and operates upon the contract so as to validate it as of the date it was originally entered into. Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, 171 Cal. 500, 153 P. 939. Then again this parol sale of August 31, 1927, was fully executed by appellant and Brandenburg & Co.

The statute of frauds has no application to an executed oral agreement. Central Bank of Oakland v. Lake, 201 Cal. 438, 257 P. 521; James v. Hall, 88 Cal. App. 528, 264 P. 516. See, also, 12 Cal. Jur. 926.

[11] In the matter of costs, we are of the opinion that, in awarding costs against appellant, the trial court was within its rights.

The judgment in this case as to this matter of costs did not come under the provisions of section 1022 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but rather under the provisions of section 1025 of said Code.

We cannot say that the court abused its discretion in awarding costs against appellant. The judgment is affirmed.

Action by Belle Klinger against the Modesto Fruit Company, Inc., and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendant appeals.

Reversed.

T. B. Scott, of Modesto, for appellant.

Frank B. Collier and J. M. Cross, both of Modesto, for respondent.

L. J. Maddux, of Modesto, for defendants.

R. L. THOMPSON, J.

This is an appeal from a joint and several judgment against agents and their undisclosed principal for the purchase price of grapes. The plaintiff is not entitled to judgment against both parties under such circumstances, and the judgment is therefore erroneous.

The complaint alleges that the defendants Horton and Gibson, as the agents of the Modesto Fruit Company, a corporation, purchased on consignment 17 carloads of black grapes from the respondent which were sold by the fruit company for the net sum of $7,102.43, no part of which was paid plaintiff, except the sum of $4,849.46, leaving a balance of $2,252.97 of the purchase price unpaid. It was specifically alleged that the defendants Horton and Gibson acted as the employees of the fruit company in that transaction without disclosing their agency. The liability of an undisclosed principal is clearly alleged.

The Modesto Fruit Company answered separately, setting up their written contract with the defendant Horton and denying his agency in the transaction. Each of the individual defendants answered separately. At the trial the court adopted findings to the effect that on May 12, 1926, the defendants Horton and Gibson entered into written contracts with the plaintiff to purchase the grapes in the name of B. W. Horton; that the Modesto Fruit Company "took over and assumed the contracts" on May 15, 1926, and that in the purchase of the grapes the defendants Horton and Gibson acted as the agents for the fruit company. The complaint and findings will support no other theory of the liability of the appellant. A joint and several judgment was thereupon entered against the defendants for the sum of $2,476.41.

This appeal was perfected by the Modesto Fruit Company only. Neither of the individual defendants appealed, and the judgment has become final against them.

[1-4] Clearly the allegations of the complaint, the findings, and the judgment are based upon the theory that the Modesto Fruit Company is liable upon these contracts for the purchase of grapes as the undisclosed principal of Horton and Gibson. There are no findings to support the existence of a joint venture or a partnership between the several defendants in this transaction. Assuming that the evidence will support a judgment against the Modesto Fruit Company as the undisclosed principal of the other codefendants, the law is well settled that under such circumstances the vendor is not entitled to a judgment against both the principal and agent. When the agency is established, the creditor must designate which party he elects to hold responsible for the obligation. McDevitt v. Corriea, 70 Cal. App. 245, 254, 233 P. 381; Ewing v. Hayward, 50 Cal. App. 708, 718, 195 P. 970; 1 Cal. Jur. 858, § 134; 2 C. J. 843, § 526; 2 Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) 1312, §§ 1729-1759. Prosecuting a claim to judgment against an agent after securing knowledge of the interest of an undisclosed principal will be deemed to constitute an election to hold the agent on the part of the creditor and will relieve the principal from further liability. 2 Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.), 1338, § 1759; 2 C. J. 846, § 529; 21 R. C. L. 894, § 68; Murphy v. Hutchinson, 93 Miss. 643, 48 So. 178, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 785, note 788, 17 Ann. Cas. 611; Gay v. Kelley, 109 Minn. 101, 123 N. W. 295, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 742, note. When there is an issue as to the existence of the agency, both the agent and the alleged principal may properly be joined in the action for the purpose of determining their relationship. But since a creditor is not entitled to a judgment against both, a choice as to which party he elects to hold liable for the obligation should be made before the judgment is rendered. Tew v. Wolfsohn (N. Y.) 77 App. Div. 454, 79 N. Y. S. 286, affirmed 174 N. Y. 272, 66 N. E. 934. The reason which is assigned for the necessity of requiring an election on the part of the creditor before the claim is reduced to a judgment is that the obligation rests upon a contract which by its terms binds only the agent who procures it, and the undisclosed principal is bound only because he is the real party for whose benefit the contract is procured. If the principal, under such circumstances, is liable, then the agent is not also liable, except for fraud in procuring the contract, which fraud was not alleged in the present case. There is but one contract and one obligation. It is not a joint or several obligation but rather an alternative one. Both parties may not be held, and the creditor must therefore choose before the entry of judgment which he will elect to hold. 2 Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) 1331, § 1750. In the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Finlayson in the case of Ewing v. Hayward, 50 Cal. App. at page 718, 195 P. 970, 975, it is aptly said:

"It seems that if, as in the instant case, the alleged undisclosed principal denies the existence of the relation of principal and agent, the party seeking to recover on the contract may commence the action against both the alleged undisclosed principal and his agent, in order to ascertain the facts. But though the plaintiff may bring the action against both, the rule, as I understand it, is that the plaintiff in such an action cannot have judgment against both the undisclosed principal and his agent, but, before the close of the case, must elect whether he will take a judgment against one or the other. See Sessions v. Block, 40 Mo. App. 569; Pittsburg Plate Glass Co. v. Roquemore (Tex. Civ. App.) 88 S. W. 449; Weil v. Raymond, 142 Mass. 206, 7 N. E. 860; Tuthill v. Wilson, 90 N. Y. 423; Mattlage v. Poole, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 556. * * * The lower court, instead of requiring plaintiff to make an election at the close of the case * * * entered judgment against both. This, I think, is ground for reversal."

The case of McDevitt v. Corriea, 70 Cal. App. 245, 233 P. 381, on principle is squarely in point and is decisive of this appeal. In that case the appellant Corriea & Bros. was a produce marketing corporation of San Francisco. It employed one Biggerstaff of Yuba county to purchase turkeys for the market season of 1922. Biggerstaff hired a man by the name of Corey to assist him. They bought the turkeys of plaintiff in their own names without disclosing their principal. The turkeys were not paid for. Suit was brought jointly against the produce marketing company and the individuals who contracted for the turkeys, for their contract price. Biggerstaff suffered judgment by default to be entered against him. Corriea & Bros. answered, denying the agency and alleging that the turkeys were shipped to them on consignment. The court found that the agency existed, but entered a joint and several judgment against all the defendants. Corriea & Bros. was the only defendant that appealed. In a well-considered opinion written by the late Justice Hart, the judgment in that case was reversed on the ground that the owner of the turkeys was not entitled to a judgment against both the agent and the principal, and that a choice as to which party the creditor elected to hold responsible should have been required.

For the foregoing reasons it becomes necessary to reverse the judgment in the present case so far as it applies to this appellant. It is so ordered.

PONCINO v. SIERRA NEVADA LIFE & CASUALTY CO.

Civ. 6923.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 25, 1930.

4. Insurance ⚡452 — Accident policy — Vehicles — Character — Passenger — Freight.

Manner in which vehicle is used, as well as construction, are important factors in determining its character as passenger or freight vehicle under accident policy.

The policy insured against death resulting from accident occasioned by "the wrecking of any private passenger motor-driven car (motorcycle not included) in which the insured is riding, or driving or by being accidentally thrown from such wrecked motor-driven car.

2. Insurance ⚡452 — Accident policy — Passenger car — Character — Incidental uses — Main use.

That automobile was used for other purposes incidental to transporting driver did not keep it from being passenger automobile under accident policy.

3. Insurance ⚡668(11) — Accident policy — Character of vehicle — Question for jury.

Whether automobile owned by insured's employer and fitted for carrying tools and used by insured for transportation was passenger car within accident policy was for jury.

4. Trial ⚡285 — Instructions — Construction with evidence.

Evidence must be considered in connection with instructions to determine whether they correctly state law of case.

5. Insurance ⚡669(11) — Instructions — "Passenger automobile" — Within accident policy — Evidence.

Instruction to consider vehicle "passenger automobile" within accident policy if customarily used for carriage of insured held proper under evidence.

Insurer contended that by instruction jury was told in effect that, though automobile was a truck in fact, they might nevertheless find for beneficiary under policy. The evidence showed that car was customarily used for carriage of driver, insured, and that carriage of other passengers or their tools was merely incidental.

6. Appeal and error ⚡930(2) — Presumption — Instructions understood.

Jurors are presumed to be persons of common intelligence and to understand charge as same was understood by court.

7. Trial ⚡256(1) — Instructions — Greater particularity — Duty — To request.

If party deemed it necessary that jury be instructed with greater particularity, it was his duty to request further instructions.

8. Trial ⚡296(2) — Instructions — Rule of construction — Prejudicial error.

Instruction stating rule of construction of insurance contracts held not prejudicial, where jury was elsewhere instructed as to meaning of policy and instructions were followed.

9. Insurance — 665(5) — Accident policy — Passenger automobile — Sufficiency of evidence.

Evidence sustained finding insured was killed while driving passenger automobile within accident policy, though incidentally car was used for other purposes.

Insured was employed as superintendent by a contractor who furnished the automobile. The car was fitted with body similar to those used on delivery wagons. Insured used it in going to and from work and sometimes carried other workmen and their tools, and also at times tools of his employer. Automobile was registered as a commercial motor vehicle.

Action by Alinda Poncino, administratrix of the estate of Eugeno Poncino, deceased, against the Sierra Nevada Life & Casualty Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

PER CURIAM.

This is an action upon a policy of insurance insuring the life of Eugeno Poncino against death resulting from accident occasioned by "the wrecking of any private passenger motor-driven car (motorcycle not included) in which the insured is riding or driving, or by being accidentally thrown from such wrecked motor-driven car." The policy was payable to the estate of the insured. While it was in force, his death was caused by injuries due to his having been thrown to the pavement in a collision between an automobile which he was driving and another car and in which his car was wrecked.

The complaint alleged that the automobile driven by the insured was "a private passenger motor-driven car." The allegation was denied by the defendant, and this was the only issue litigated at the trial. A jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and, from the judgment entered thereon, the defendant has appealed.

As grounds for reversal it is urged that the implied finding that the automobile in question was "a private passenger motor-driven car" is unsupported, and that the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit and in certain of its instructions to the jury.

It was testified that the deceased was employed as superintendent by a contractor engaged in erecting concrete buildings and other structures. It was his duty each day to go from place to place where work was being carried on and direct the men employed. In so doing he used the automobile in question, which he kept at his residence, but which was owned by his employer. The car was a Ford runabout, upon the rear of which the owner had attached a short box or body similar to those used on ordinary delivery wagons. The insured occasionally transported to and from their places of employment one or more of the workmen, who rode either with the driver or in the rear. These workmen frequently carried with them the tools used in their employment. The insured also from time to time carried thereon empty cement sacks with tools owned by his employer, consisting of shovels and hoes, and at the time of the accident there were in the car three or four bags, described by the witnesses as carpet bags, containing carpenters' tools. The car was registered by the owner with the motor vehicle department as a commercial vehicle.

[1] In support of its contention that the car was not a passenger vehicle, defendant relies upon the following cases: Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Austin, 42 S. E. 522, 59 L. R. A. 107, 94 Am. St. Rep. 125; Bogart v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. (C. C. Wash.) 187 F. 851; Wood v. General Accident Ins. Co. (C. C.) 156 F. 982; Standard Accident Ins. Co. v. Hite, 37 Okl. 305, 132 P. 333, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 986. In the first case the policy provided for double indemnity in the event injuries were received by the insured "while riding as a passenger, and being actually in or upon any railway passenger car." The insured, who was a paymaster of a railway company, was injured in the course of his duty while riding in his pay car. It was held that he was not in contemplation of the contract a passenger, and that his car, although capable of being used as a vehicle for the transportation of passengers and had formerly been so used, was not a passenger car within the meaning of the policy. In the Bogart and Wood Cases the policies insured against "injuries from accident while riding as a passenger and being in or on any railway passenger car." It was held that a mail car was not a railway passenger car within the meaning of the policies, and that there could be no recovery. The case last cited involved a policy which exempted the insurer from liability if the insured was injured "while on a locomotive, freight car or caboose used for passenger service." The insured was in charge of a shipment of cattle, and was riding at the time of his death in a caboose from which all persons except drovers and the employees of the railway company were excluded. A recovery was denied on the ground that the caboose was not being used for passenger service within the common and ordinary acceptance of that term or within the meaning of the policy.

As held in the above cases, the manner in which a vehicle is used, as well as its construction, is an important factor in determining its character, and such was the view of the court in Wilmarth v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 168 Cal. 536, 143 P. 780, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1120, which case involved the question whether an elevator used both for freight and passengers was a "passenger elevator" within the meaning of an accident policy. It was held that the provision in the policy for double indemnity in case of injury to the insured "while in a passenger elevator" had reference not only to elevators used exclusively for passengers, but to elevators customarily used for conveying passengers, though also used for carrying freight.

[2, 3] As stated, there was testimony that the car was sold to the employer of the insured as a passenger car, and that it was primarily used to transport the latter from place to place in the course of his employment. That a body was attached and that the insured at the same time used the car for other purposes incidental to the main purpose would not necessarily alter its character. Under the doctrine of Wilmarth v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., supra, it would still be a passenger car; and, as in that case, it was in view of the evidence proper to submit its character to the jury with proper instructions.

[4-7] The court charged the jury that a passenger automobile need not be in any particular form or made in any particular way, or with any particular contrivance or device, and that it did not need to be used exclusively for the carriage of passengers; further that "if it is customarily used for the carriage of passengers or for the carriage of the driver that is sufficient to constitute it a passenger automobile within the meaning of the insurance policy." Defendant insists that in the quoted portion of the instruction the jury was told in effect that, though they believed the automobile to be a truck, they might nevertheless find for the plaintiff.

In determining whether instructions state correctly the law of a particular case, they must be considered in connection with the evidence in the case. Hellman Commercial, etc., Bank v. Southern Pac. Co., 190 Cal. 626, 214 P. 46. Here the testimony shows sufficiently that the car was customarily used for the carriage of the driver, namely, the insured; the carriage of other passengers or their tools being but incidental. This manifestly was the evidential fact to which the instruction referred; and it cannot reasonably be assumed that the jury was misled thereby. Jurors are presumed to be persons of common intelligence and capable of comprehending the ordinary use of language as applied to the particular proposition under consideration and in reference to which it is employed, and the appellate court will not assume that they may not have understood the charge as the same was understood by the court. Douglas v. Southern Pacific Co., 203 Cal. 390, 264 P. 237. The instruction, in view of the evidence, was not erroneous; and, if defendant deemed it necessary that the jury be instructed with greater particularity, it was its duty to request further instructions. Jacobson v. Lamb, 91 Cal. App. 405, 267 P. 114; Putnam v. Pickwick Stages (Cal. App.) 276 P. 1055.

[8] The jury was instructed that "in cases of uncertainty the language of a contract should be interpreted most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist"; and also "that the language in an insurance policy is framed and formulated by the insurance company; and if that language is in any respect doubtful in meaning or ambiguous or susceptible of two constructions, then it is the duty of the jury to place the construction upon the language which is most favorable to the plaintiff, and resolve any doubt, uncertainty or ambiguity against the insurance company." Defendant contends that no provision in the policy required construction, and in any case that the question was one for the court and not for the jury. In Postler v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 173 Cal. 1, 158 P. 1022, it was held that an instruction stating the rule of construction of such contracts should not be given to the jury; the question being one for the court. In the present case, however, the jury was elsewhere fully instructed as to the meaning of the material terms of the policy, and it is clear that these instructions were followed. Moreover, it has been held that error in leaving to the jury the interpretation of the provisions of a contract is not prejudicial where the jury followed the law applicable to the case in their consideration of the instrument. Stewart v. Erskine-Bolst, 66 Cal. App. 461, 226 P. 644.

[9] The evidence was reasonably sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury, and no error has been shown which in our opinion justifies the conclusion that the same resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

RUCKER et ux. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY. ★

Civ. 7023.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 25, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 10, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 22, 1930.

1. Appeal and error — Right of appeal.

Right of appeal is right of written law based on Constitution and statutes of state.

2. Costs — Forma pauperis.

Right to sue or defend in forma pauperis, if allowed at all, must be regulated with utmost care.

3. Appeal and error — Clerk's fees.

Motion for leave to perfect appeal in forma pauperis and to require furnishing of clerk's transcript on appeal and reporter's transcript without payment of fees held properly denied under statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 274).

Code Civ. Proc. § 274, declares that no reporter must be required to perform any service in a civil case until his fees therefor have been paid to him or deposited with the clerk of the court.

Application by Tommie C. Rucker and another for writ of mandate prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Elliot Craig, Judge, to compel granting of motion for leave to perfect appeal in forma pauperis and to require the furnishing of clerk's transcript on appeal and reporter's transcript of proceedings without payment of fees.

Writ denied.

M. H. Broyles, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and Fred M. Cross, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J.

Petitioners Rucker and wife have appealed to the Supreme Court of California from a judgment rendered against them as defendants in an action for the quieting of title to certain real property. After serving and filing their notice of appeal, petitioners applied to the superior court by motion for an order allowing them to perfect their appeal in forma pauperis, and particularly for an order that the clerk of the superior court furnish to appellants, without cost, the necessary clerk's transcript on appeal, and that the court reporter, who acted as such reporter at the trial of the action, furnish to appellants a reporter's transcript of the proceedings of the trial, also without cost to appellant. The motion was supported by affidavits of facts tending to prove that appellants were in a condition of poverty, and were unable to pay in advance the costs on appeal. The judge to whom said application was made denied the motion "upon the ground that the above-entitled cases have been duly and regularly tried in above court, and judgments adverse to defendants (petitioners herein) have been duly filed, docketed and entered therein, and upon the further ground that this court is without jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for."

[1-3] In Martin v. Superior Court, 176 Cal. 289, 168 P. 135, L. R. A. 1918B, 313, the right of a superior court to authorize the prosecution of an action in forma pauperis in that court was sustained. The ruling there made was based upon the rights of the courts of common law to admit to sue in forma pauperis such poor persons as had not ability to pay the expenses incidental to the prosecution of actions to enforce their rights. It is not shown that this right extended to appeals or writs of error. The right of appeal is a creature of written law, and finds its authority in the Constitution and statutes of the state. Gale v. Tuolumne County Water Co., 169 Cal. 46, 52, 145 P. 532. The right to sue or defend in forma pauperis is of such nature that, unless it is carefully guarded, it is most susceptible of abuse. Therefore, if allowed at all, it should be regulated with the utmost care. Majors v. Superior Court, 181 Cal. 270, 280, 184 P. 18, 6 A. L. R. 1274. In the present case it appears that, if the official reporter is paid compensation at the rate allowed by law for furnishing the demanded transcript, the estimated cost thereof will exceed $100. There is no legal mode of requiring payment therefor out of the public treasury. If the reporter can be compelled to perform this service in this case without compensation, he would be under a like compulsory burden at the instance of the next litigant who is unable to pay, even though the value of the service runs to a very much larger sum. And all of this would be in the face of the statute which declares that "no reporter must be required to perform any service in a civil case until his fees therefor have been paid to him or deposited with the clerk of the court." Section 274, Code Civ. Proc.

Apparently there has been no formal expression of opinion on this question, in the decisions of the Supreme Court. In the case of Brandow v. Superior Court, L. A. No. 11606, the petitioner, claiming the rights of a pauper litigant, applied to the Supreme Court for writ of mandate to require the superior court to allow the preparation of an appeal without payment of costs by the appellant. This demand included the furnishing of a stenographic reporter's transcript without payment therefor by appellant. The petition for the writ of mandate was denied, by order of date June 10, 1929.¹ We infer from such denial that the justices of the Supreme Court were of the opinion that, in the absence of any other provision by statute for the payment of the expenses of a reporter's transcript as part of the record on appeal, such expenses would have to be paid by the appealing party, and that there is no exception to this rule.

It should be noted in connection with this matter of expenses of the reporter's transcript that appellants were not without an alternative remedy of which they could have availed themselves without a reporter's transcript. The reporter's transcript provided for by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure is allowed at the election of the party "in lieu of preparing and settling a bill of exceptions." It is quite possible to prepare a bill of exceptions without the expense of a reporter's transcript. In times past this has often been done.

The alternative writ is discharged, and the petition for peremptory writ is denied.

EDWARDS v. CALIFORNIA SWEET POTATO CORPORATION et al.
Civ. 6602.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.
March 28, 1930.

1. Trial ☞393(1) — Separate findings — Several causes of action.

Court should make only one finding on matters common to all causes of action, and separate finding on each matter applicable to only one cause.

2. Appeal and error ☞1075 — Restricting discussion to certain count — Abandonment of others.

Statement in brief that all questions, except those affecting third count, were eliminated, was abandonment of objection involving failure to find separately on other counts.

3. Bills and notes ☞489(7) — Immaterial variance.

Variance between allegation that note was executed when money was advanced, and proof that advance preceded note, was immaterial (Code Civ. Proc. § 469).

4. Appeal and error ☞219(2) — Objections in lower court — Findings — Variance.

That variance could have been removed by amendment prevented defendant, failing to object, from successfully attacking findings on appeal.

5. Pleading ☞387 — Immaterial variance — Finding facts on evidence.

Where variance between allegation and proof was immaterial, court properly found facts according to evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 470).

6. Banks and banking ☞187 — Conflict in evidence — Sufficiency of testimony.

Although bank's records contradicted testimony that money was deposited, same testimony, showing that debtor received money, sustained finding that money was advanced to debtor.

7. Account, action on ☞22 — Book account — Showing charge against debtor.

To recover on book account, book itself must show against whom charge is made; charge against one being ineffective to charge another.

8. Evidence ☞158(18) — Book account — Testimony regarding entries — Admissibility.

Introduction of book as evidence of account did not render inadmissible testimony of party keeping books regarding transactions shown by entries.

9. Corporations ☞83 — Cancellation of sale of stock — Evidence.

Transaction held to amount to mutual cancellation of completed sale of stock, whereby corporation, in consideration of surrender of unpaid stock, canceled buyer's indebtedness.

The buyer's agreement with the corporation evidenced, in apt language, a sale of stock with present transfer of title, but with deposit in escrow to secure payment of balance of purchase price. The board of directors subsequently adopted resolution authorizing president to cancel balance due upon surrender, release, or return of stock.

10. Corporations ☞83 — Stock subscription — Rescission — Unanimous consent.

Subscription for capital stock of corporation may be rescinded or canceled only with unanimous consent of stockholders.

11. Corporations ☞269(3) — Consideration for common stock — No par value — Evidence.

Evidence raising question whether there was consideration for issuance of common stock with no par value raised no question regarding value of such consideration.

GRAY, Justice pro tem.

[1, 2] In this action to enforce stockholders' liability, the complaint briefly stating essential matters, alleged, in three separate causes of action, that plaintiff's assignor, as accommodation indorser of notes of California Sweet Potato Corporation, hereinafter called the corporation, for the sums of $45,000 and $4,000, paid thereon, for principal and interest, the sums of $46,545.61 and $4,162.24, respectively, and, as accommodation maker of the corporation's note for $8,000, paid thereon for principal and interest, the sum of $8,073.24, of which there is a balance due of $5,878.76, after deducting proceeds from a third party's note, payable to the corporation, which it had deposited as security for payment of assignor's note. The appealing defendants (hereinafter called the defendants) denied these allegations. As to the issues thus raised, the court only found that plaintiff's assignor, after maturity and nonpayment by the corporation, paid on account of the three notes $14,093.58. In their opening brief, defendants claimed that the court's failure to make a separate and distinct finding as to the amount of payment on each note constituted a failure to find on material issues. Properly the court should have made but one finding as to each matter which was common or applicable to all causes of action, and should have made a separate finding on each matter which was common or applicable only to one cause of action. Anderson v. Blean, 19 Cal. App. 581, 126 P. 559. While conceding that the finding did determine the total payments on the three notes, defendants originally urged that this lumping together of all payments, by leaving undetermined the amount of payment on each note, deprived them of an opportunity to question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding. However, their statement in their closing brief that plaintiff's concession that a third party had paid practically all of the note for $45,000 "eliminates from discussion of the first three counts of the complaint all question other than that relative to the third count" (next considered) amounts to an abandonment of this objection, and relieves us of further consideration of the matter. Estate of Hinde, 200 Cal. 710, 254 P. 561.

[3-6] In its third count, the complaint alleged that the corporation became indebted to a bank for the sum of $8,000 advanced to it, and that, at the time of the advance, plaintiff's assignor, at the corporation's request and as an accommodation maker, executed and delivered to the bank his note in such amount. The court found in accordance with this allegation, except that it found that the money was advanced prior to the execution and delivery of the note. The evidence discloses that the corporation had previously borrowed from the bank, on the note of its fiscal agent, the sum of $10,000 and that the note of plaintiff's assignor was given to satisfy the unpaid balance due thereon. The same note was alleged, proven, and found. The only difference between allegation and proof was as to whether the consideration therefor was money advanced by the bank prior or subsequent to its execution and delivery. This difference, therefore, is an immaterial variance (Code Civ. Proc. § 469), as plaintiff contends, and not a failure of proof, as defendants urge. Brown v. Pickard, 4 Utah, 292, 9 P. 573, 11 P. 512; Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 717, 127 P. 66; Williams v. Macondray, 57 Cal. App. 359, 207 P. 285. This difference could have been removed by an amendment to the complaint, if defendants had been misled (Code Civ. Proc. § 469), but, as the record shows no objection at the trial, defendants cannot now, for the first time, attack the findings, amply supported by the evidence, on this ground. 2 Cal. Jur. 278. The court correctly found in accordance with the evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 470. Defendants also contend that this finding is unsupported by the evidence, because the bank's records contradict verbal testimony that such sum of $10,000 was deposited in the bank to the corporation's credit. While this is true, yet the same testimony, without contradiction, shows that the corporation received the money, although it may not have so deposited it. This testimony amply supports this finding.

The complaint alleged that the corporation became indebted to plaintiff's assignor in the sum of $19,846.18 for moneys advanced to and for it (according to the fourth count) and for a balance, upon an account stated, due upon an open, mutual, and current account (according to the fifth count). The answer denied these allegations. The court found that, on a specified date, a balance upon an open, mutual, and current book account was due to plaintiff's assignor from Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company, that four years previously the corporation had, in writing, promised to pay said debt, and that it, prior to the commencement of this action, had paid all thereof except $1,227.87 principal and $1,390.03 interest. The court further found that plaintiff's assignor advanced moneys and credits to the corporation in the sum of $17,425.27, upon which interest in the sum of $5,159.23 had accrued. To prove the debt, a book of plaintiff's assignor, which showed about twenty-six items charged against Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company and but four against the corporation, was admitted in evidence without objection. The assignor testified that the book was opened, prior to the corporation's creation, to show transactions with said company, and that, when the corporation succeeded to the company's business, the charges which were of the same general nature as formerly, while in truth against the corporation, were continued to be entered against the company. He attempted to give the details and basis of each charge, but was prevented, from so doing by defendants' objection that the entries were the best evidence. However, he did testify that each item evidenced a debt due from the corporation. Defendants now urge the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings because only four items in the book charge or connect the corporation with the transaction recorded. They do concede in their opening brief that oral testimony of the assignor, given on reopening of the case, is competent evidence connecting the corporation with ten items, not charged on the book to it.

[7, 8] Neither count pleads an action of a book account, although the court did find that there was due on a book account the sum of $1,227.87. To recover upon a book account, the book itself must show against whom the charge is made and a charge against one person cannot constitute a charge against another. Wright v. Loaiza, 177 Cal. 605, 171 P. 311. In view of the meager testimony on this matter, set forth in the briefs, we must assume, in support of this finding, that the court based it upon the above four items, which are admittedly sufficient in form and amount for that purpose. The introduction of the book in evidence did not render inadmissible the testimony of plaintiff's assignor as to the transactions evidenced by the entries. Schurtz v. Kerkow, 85 Cal. 277, 24 P. 609; Bushnell v. Simpson, 119 Cal. 658, 51 P. 1080; Cowdery v. McChesney, 124 Cal. 363, 57 P. 221.

[9, 10] Plaintiff questions the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that Geno & Co. were stockholders, because, as he claims, the agreement of April 24, 1922, between the corporation and Geno & Co. was a stock-selling agreement between principal and agent, not a stock subscription, and, even if it were a stock subscription, it was canceled by the board of directors, with the consent of the stockholders. An examination of that agreement clearly shows that, in apt language, it evidenced a sale of stock with a present transfer of title, but with a deposit in escrow to secure payment of the unpaid balance of the purchase price. Ten months later, the board of directors adopted a resolution which, after reciting that Geno & Co. threatened litigation and that it would be necessary for the corporation to file suit to compel payment of the balance due under the agreement, authorized, the president to adjust and compromise the conflicting claims and to that end to cancel the balance due the corporation upon the surrender, release, or return of the stock. Whether the president ever acted does not appear, although the stock was in possession of the corporation at time of trial, marked "Canceled." The transaction pictured is the mutual cancellation of a completed sale of stock whereby, in consideration of the return of the stock, unpaid for, the corporation canceled the purchaser's indebtedness for that stock. But a subscription for capital stock of a corporation may only be rescinded or canceled with the unanimous consent of the stockholders. Pacific Fruit Co. v. Coon, 107 Cal. 447, 40 P. 542; Thomas v. Wentworth Hotel Co., 16 Cal. App. 403, 117 P. 1041, 1046; Silica Brick Co. v. Winsor, 171 Cal. 18, 151 P. 425. Since there is not only an entire absence of an affirmative showing of such consent, but the positive testimony of two defendants that they did not consent, the court correctly found in accordance with the law and the evidence.

[11] Plaintiff contends that, as the evidence shows that there was no consideration for the issuance of "Class B Common" stock, the court erred in including that stock in its finding as to the total number of shares issued, which is one element in determining the extent of the stockholders' liability of the defendants. The complaint merely mentions the other two classes of stock, and is silent as to this class. Nor does it join as parties defendant the owners of this stock. The only evidence relative to this matter is contained in the minutes of the corporation offered by plaintiff, and the only pertinent parts of those minutes are the articles of incorporation and two resolutions, adopted by the board of directors on April 4, 1922, and February 3, 1925, respectively. From the articles, it appears that the corporation was incorporated under the laws of the state of Delaware with three classes of stock, to wit, Preferred and "Class A" common, each with a par value of $100 per share, and "Class B" common of no par value. The first resolution, passed at the first meeting of the board, authorized the issuance of all the "Class B" common stock to three named persons, in consideration of their offer to turn over to the corporation the results of their exhaustive study of the manufacture of alcohol from sweet potatoes.

The question as to the proper basis of computing the total number of shares issued, in an action to enforce stockholders' liability where several classes of stock of different par value have been issued, has been presented to the Supreme Court on several occasions collaterally, but never directly. In Del Monte L. & P. Co. v. Jordan, 196 Cal. 488, 238 P. 710, the court gave as one reason for denying a writ of mandate to compel the secretary of state to file amended articles of a California corporation, which set forth two classes of stock, one of par value and the other of no par value, that it was the intent of article 12, § 3, of the Constitution, as to stockholders' liability, to require corporations, organized under the laws of the state, to have their capitalization represented in shares of a single par value, because of the difficulty in determining the liability where stock differed in value. In Land Development Co. v. Jordan, 198 Cal. 346, 245 P. 187, a writ of mandate was issued, compelling the secretary of state to file articles of a domestic corporation which stated all stock was of no par value. In that case, the stock being all of one class, no difficulty could arise in computing the liability on a share basis. In Commonwealth Acc. Corp. v. Jordan, 198 Cal. 618, 246 P. 796, 801, a writ of mandate was issued to compel the filing of articles of a Delaware corporation, having a mixed stock structure, similar to that of the instant corporation. The court in that case stated that the stockholders of a foreign corporation are subjected to the same liabilities as are the stockholders of domestic corporations, when such foreign corporations enter this state for the purpose of transacting business. The court, in passing upon one phase of the question here involved, said: "The question of how this equalized liability of the stockholders of a foreign corporation is to be established and enforced is one which would be determinable by the courts when it arose in a proper case, but we do not think it is presentable upon the threshold of the proposed entry of such foreign corporation for the purpose of transacting business in this state, nor that it is involved in the present inquiry."

Is the instant case a proper one in which to establish that formula by which stock of different values may be computed with equality? We think not. The owners of the no par value stock are not before us. Obviously the creditor is interested because that formula determines the total number of shares, which is the starting point for the ascertainment of the individual liability. But the creditor (the plaintiff in this case) has not presented a record requiring or upon which the matter can be decided. The pleadings present no issue as to the non-par value stock. The evidence merely presents the question as to whether or not there was a consideration for this stock, but does not raise any question as to the value of such consideration. Upon the first question, the only evidence is contained in the two resolutions, each contradictory of the other. The court, evidently, believed the recital in the first resolution and found that there was consideration. It was not asked or required to pass upon the value of that consideration. In absence of any evidence called to our attention to the contrary, it may be that the court believed that such consideration was a contribution to the corporate capital equal proportionately to that of other classes of stock.

Obviously, before any formula can be stated as to the relation between various classes in computing the total shares issued, it is essential that some evidence be introduced upon which to predicate that formula.

The judgment is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied April 18, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 15, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1) — Review — Court's finding — Conflicting evidence.

That testimony was conflicting is immaterial on appeal, if trial court's finding is supported by sufficient evidence.

2. Corporations ⇨426(1, 10) — Ratification — Officers' contract — Benefits.

Corporation may ratify contract made by its officers, or accept benefits of such contract.

3. Corporations ⇨426(10) — Loan — Benefit — Note — Corporate obligation.

That money advanced to corporation was used for corporate purposes is important in determining whether note therefor, signed by president and treasurer, is corporate obligation.

The note in question was signed in name of corporation by its president and its treasurer, but was not under corporate seal, and had not been formally authorized by resolution of board of directors. The by-laws contained no provision authorizing president or treasurer to execute notes.

PLUMMER, J.

The plaintiff in this action had judgment against the defendant for the recovery of the sum of $5,250 principal, together with interest thereon from the date of the entry of judgment on a promissory note dated September 22, 1923. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

At the conclusion of the trial, the court made and filed its findings, which we summarize as follows:

That on or about the 22d day of September, 1923, the defendant made, executed, and delivered to the plaintiff its promissory note, in writing, whereby it promised and agreed to pay to the plaintiff, ten days after date, without interest, the sum of $5,250. The note contained the usual covenants as to payment of attorneys' fees and costs in the event of suit. The note was signed, "Central Mendocino County Power Co., Frank W. Taft, President. H. W. Cook, Treasurer." The seal of the corporation was not attached. That, at the time of the execution of this note, no previous resolution or authorization was passed or had by the directors of the corporation, or, as stated in the finding, "the execution of the aforesaid note was not formally authorized by the Board of Directors of the defendant corporation, in that no resolution was passed by the Board of Directors formally authorizing the execution of the note." The by-laws of the corporation contained no provision authorizing the execution of notes by the president and treasurer. That subsequent to the execution of said note, and on or about the 18th day of February, 1924, at a time when the plaintiff was about to institute a suit against the defendant company on the promissory note involved in this action, in consideration of the plaintiff agreeing to forbear bringing suit until the 15th day of May, 1924, the defendant company executed a forbearance agreement in the following words and figures, to wit:

"In consideration of the forbearance and agreement to forbear until on or after the 15th day of May, 1924, on the part of J. Andrew Cook, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, to bring any suit or action for the collection of that certain promissory note in his favor, dated September 22, 1923, in the principal sum of $5,250.00, made, executed and delivered by the undersigned, Central Mendocino County Power Company, to said J. Andrew Cook, or order, and of his agreement to extend and the extension of the maturity, or due date, of said note to said 15th day of May, 1924, Central Mendocino County Power Company hereby agrees and promises to pay interest on said principal sum of $5,250.00 indebtedness evidenced by said note at the rate of eight (8%) per cent. per annum from the 3rd day of October, 1923, shall be due and payable on said 15th day of May, 1924, and said quarterly installments of interest shall be thereafter due and payable on the 3rd day of June, September, December and March in each and every year until the whole sum of said principal and interest shall be fully paid.

"In Witness Whereof, said Central Mendocino County Power Company has caused its corporate name to be hereto subscribed and its corporate seal hereunto affixed by its President and Treasurer, and duly authorized this 18th day of February, 1924, by resolution of the Board of Directors.

"Central Mendocino County Power Co.

"Frank W. Taft, President.

"[Corporate Seal.] H. W. Cook, Treasurer."

That the board of directors of the defendant corporation, at the time of the execution of the forbearance instrument, passed a resolution authorizing the execution of the same, and also, in addition, ratifying the promissory note involved in this action. That, by so ratifying the aforesaid promissory note, the same became a binding obligation of the corporation. That at the time of the execution of the note herein referred to, to wit, on the 22d day of September, 1923, the plaintiff advanced to the defendant the sum of $5,000, and that the defendant company received the benefit of said money, and that the corporation is now estopped from questioning the authority of the president and the treasurer to execute said note on behalf of the corporation. That defendant, through its directors and officers, received the benefit of the plaintiff's money, with full knowledge of what the president and treasurer had done. That said note was not paid through any arrangement with Mrs. Amy Reque Long, had and made with Mrs. Lillian Cook, in relation to the purchase of the shares of capital stock in said corporation. The court further found that said promissory note was unpaid. Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of the plaintiff.

The record shows that, at the time of the organization of the defendant corporation, the promoters pooled 63,242 shares of the common stock thereof, this stock all being issued in the name of one H. W. Cook; the corporation being organized by Edward Morris, H. W. Cook, and Frank W. Taft, as principal promoters. Taft was elected president, and Morris vice president and general manager. There were two other persons electe as directors, but the ones named apparently controlled and managed the business of the corporation. It appears from the record that Mrs. Lillian Cook and some others advanced considerable money to the defendant corporation, and were credited with an equitable interest in what was called the "pooled" stock, being the shares of stock to which we have heretofore referred; the record showing that the stock so pooled was for the purpose of enabling the corporation to more easily finance its enterprises.

The trial court, preceding the filing of its findings, delivered its opinion in writing, setting forth the facts surrounding the execution of the note sued upon, from which we take the following: "The defendant corporation was in great financial difficulties; Frank W. Taft was president; Edward Morris was the vice-president and general manager; H. W. Cook, a brother of plaintiff, was acting secretary and treasurer. Mr. H. W. Cook and his mother, Lillian Cook, had invested considerable money in the defendant company. The company had issued checks on the Bank of Willits in payment of its pressing obligations to the amount of between $4,000 and $5,000, and there were no funds in the bank to meet these checks. Mr. Morris was endeavoring by all means possible to obtain money to meet these pressing obligations. Mr. H. W. Cook was asked by Mr. Morris if a loan could be secured from the plaintiff; the matter was taken up with plaintiff and subsequently plaintiff, on September 21, 1923, gave his check to defendant, Central Mendocino County Power Company, for $2,000, which was cashed by the defendant and deposited in the Bank of Willits to the account of the defendant corporation. On September 22, 1923, plaintiff deposited with the United Bank & Trust Company, of San Francisco, an additional $3,000, with instructions to transmit the same by wire to the Bank of Willits for the credit of defendant. This was done and this money was also deposited in the Bank of Willits to the credit of defendant."

As we have stated, on February 18, 1924, the forbearance agreement was executed by the corporation and delivered to the plaintiff. By the terms of this forbearance agreement, the corporation promised and agreed to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $5,250, with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. The agreement concludes as follows: "In Witness Whereof, the said Central Mendocino County Power Company has caused its corporate name to be hereto subscribed, and its corporate seal hereunto affixed, by its president and treasurer, and duly authorized this 18th day of February, 1924, by resolution of the Board of Directors." A copy of the resolution of the board of directors was also set forth in the transcript, from which it appears that the board of directors of the corporation, on the day in question, adopted a resolution authorizing the execution of the forbearance instrument to which we have just referred. A copy of this resolution was furnished the plaintiff, bearing the attestation of the secretary thereof as follows: "The above resolution, adopted by the Board of Directors of the Central Mendocino County Power Company, was ordered spread upon the minutes of a special meeting of the company, held at Willits, California, on February 18, 1924. Attest: H. W. Cook, Secretary. [Corporate Seal.]" On the same date, the 18th day of February, 1924, the general manager of the corporation, Edward Morris, wrote to the plaintiff inclosing the papers to which we have referred, and stating therein: "This being a company note, it is in no way involved in the Watson transaction, and is not jeopardized by the situation that we find ourselves in." This apparently refers to a note executed and bearing interest as of the original date, maturing May 15, 1924, obviously intended to take the place of the original note. As to whether such a meeting of the corporation was held, as herein referred to, the testimony is in conflict, both Morris and Taft testifying that there was no such meeting, notwithstanding the fact that both Morris and Taft had written letters stating in substance that such a meeting was held. The secretary testified that there was such a meeting. The court found in accordance with the testimony of the secretary, and we think the testimony sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court in this particular.

[1-3] On behalf of the appellant, it is contended that the note was not an obligation of the company, but that it was intended as an advancement by the plaintiff for an equity in the pooled stock. As stated in the opinion of the trial court, there was some conversation in relation to the plaintiff advancing $5,000, and accepting an equity in the pool herein referred to, but it is further stated in the opinion of the trial court that the plaintiff stated that the money was a loan to the company, and that he did not advance the money as the purchase of an equity in the pooled stock. The finding that the money was loaned and used by the company, is supported by sufficient testimony, although there is a conflict upon this issue. Being supported, the fact of conflicting testimony is immaterial here. Another principle also comes to the aid of the finding of the court, in view of the fact that the corporation had and used the money advanced by the plaintiff, as herein stated. In this particular we quote the language of the trial court: "I am also of the opinion that the defendant is estopped, by the fact that it received the benefit of the money, from now raising the question that the president and treasurer had no authority to contract on behalf of the corporation. The general principle of estoppel is that having received and enjoyed, or obtained the benefit of the transaction, with knowledge, the corporation cannot repudiate liability and escape the burdens on the ground that it was not authorized," etc.—citing 6 Cal. Jur. p. 1129. The opinion of the court also refers to other facts disclosed by the record, and this we may also quote: "It is also in evidence, and not disputed, that on other occasions the president and treasurer had borrowed money and executed notes on behalf of the corporation, with the apparent approval and acquiescence of the Board of Directors." That a corporation may ratify the contract of its officers, or accept benefits of a contract made by its president or other officer, is well established. Sessions v. Pacific Improvement Co., 57 Cal. App. 24, 206 P. 653; Commercial S. Co. v. Modesto Drug Co., 43 Cal. App. 174, 184 P. 964; Aigeltinger, Inc., v. Burke, 176 Cal. 621, 169 P. 373; 6 Cal. Jur. p. 1129; Cook on Corporations (8th Ed.) § 713a, p. 2951; Porter v. Lassen County, etc., Co., 127 Cal. 261, 59 P. 563; 6 Cal. Jur. p. 1122. Other cases might be cited, but we deem the foregoing sufficient. The fact that the money is used by the corporation for its purposes and benefits is a leading factor in supporting the conclusion of the trial court that the instrument sued upon is a corporate obligation. San Joaquin Valley Bank v. Gate City Oil Co. et al., 170 Cal. 250, 149 P. 557.

It is contended on the part of the appellant that, in the sale of the pooled stock to Mrs. Long, as hereinbefore referred to, the money advanced by the plaintiff and the note issued by the company, as herein referred to, was considered as money representing the amount due the plaintiff, paid to one Lillian Cook. As stated by the trial court in its opinion, it appears from the transcript that such an arrangement was considered by other parties than the plaintiff herein, but, as also stated by the trial court, in the final escrow agreements entered into terminating in the sale and purchase of the pooled stock, no mention is made of the claim of the plaintiff.

We may further add that the transcript is entirely silent as to any agreement on the part of the plaintiff to accept payment from any person other than the corporation, nor does it appear from the transcript that any conversation or negotiations were ever had with the plaintiff relative to any such arrangement. The trial court in this particular, in its opinion, uses the following language, which we adopt: "I do not doubt that during the preliminary negotiations between Mrs. Long and Mr. Robinson, the attorney for Lillian Cook, the settlement of the J. Andrew Cook note involved in this action was discussed, and also that Mrs. Long desired that said note be included in the purchase and settlement of the Cook interests, but suffice it to say that said note was not included in the final settlement. All the evidence points unerringly to this conclusion—the J. Andrew Cook note was not surrendered; the case at bar, which was then pending in Alameda County, was not dismissed; no release was produced from J. Andrew Cook; the J. Andrew Cook note was not mentioned in the final escrow instructions given to the American Trust Company; Mrs. Long accepted the terms contained in the escrow instructions and completed the purchase without demanding that the J. Andrew Cook note be included; J. Andrew Cook was in no way a party or interested in Mrs. Long's negotiations to purchase the Lillian Cook stock. In the face of all these undisputed facts, it is impossible for me to find that Mrs. Long paid this J. Andrew Cook note."

Referring again to the resolution approving and ratifying the action of the president and treasurer of the company in giving the note sued upon, it is contended on the part of the appellant that the resolution, as heretofore stated, was never adopted, and points to the fact that the resolution does not actually appear in the minutes of the corporation. This, however, is explained by the secretary in stating that the resolution was kept off the minutes at the request of Morris, who, by the way, was the manager of the corporation, in order that the source from which the corporation was drawing its finances might not be disclosed, and it was not desired that other interests should learn of the transaction.

There being sufficient testimony in the record to support the findings of the trial court, it would serve no useful purpose to review the authorities cited by the appellant, based upon its contentions as to what the facts are, or as to what the findings of the trial court should have been.

The judgment is affirmed.

Foreign corporation purchasing mining property was not "doing business" within state within law relating thereto (Corporation Act 1915, as amended).

The issue arose in an action to set aside a certain deed executed to foreign corporation for certain mining property situated within the state upon the theory that the acquiring of such property constituted "doing business" within state, and the grounds upon which relief was predicated were that prior to purchase of the real estate the foreign corporation had not filed any certified copies of its articles of incorporation or otherwise complied with Corporation Act (St. 1915, p. 422) as amended by St. 1921, p. 638, and St. 1923, p. 1034.

PLUMMER, J.

This action was instituted by the plaintiffs for the purpose of securing a judgment annulling, setting aside, and adjudging void a certain deed executed by the plaintiffs to the Mt. Gaines Mining & Milling Company.

[1] The record shows that the Mt. Gaines Mining & Milling Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Nevada. On the 21st day of April, 1924, the plaintiffs, for a valuable consideration, made, executed, and delivered to the defendant mining company a deed of conveyance to certain mining property situate in the state of California. The complaint is based upon the theory that the acquiring of this property by the defendant Mt. Gaines Mining & Milling Company constituted doing business within the state of California, and the grounds upon which plaintiffs allege they are entitled to the relief prayed for is that prior to the purchase of the real estate referred to the Mt. Gaines Mining & Milling Company had not filed any certified copies of its articles of incorporation, or otherwise complied with the act of the Legislature of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 422), as amended in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 1034), relative to foreign corporations transacting business within this state. The cause is before us simply upon the judgment roll, and therefore all the findings of the court must be taken as supported by the testimony.

The court found that on and prior to the 1st day of April, 1924, the Mt. Gaines Mining & Milling Company had not begun doing intrastate business in the state of California; that on and prior to said date said company had not maintained any office in the state of California for the purpose of transacting business in the state of California; that the conveyance from the plaintiffs to the mining company of the real property involved in the action was made for a good and sufficient consideration. The conclusions of law naturally followed, and were drawn by the court that the deed referred to was valid, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief in said action. The complaint and the findings referred to a mortgage executed by the mining company on the property purchased by it, which mortgage was executed to a third party, but as it does not affect the validity of the deed executed by the plaintiffs to the mining company, need not be further mentioned herein.

[2] In support of the appeal in this cause the appellants cite a number of Wisconsin cases, based upon a section of the Foreign Corporations Act of that state, which reads as follows: "No foreign corporation shall transact business or acquire hold or dispose of property in this state unless it shall have first complied with the requirements of the statute," etc. St. Wis. 1927, § 226.02. To this, the respondent interposes the unanswerable argument that the Corporation Act of the State of California does not, and has not, since 1921 (St. 1921, p. 638), required the filing of certified copies of its articles of incorporation, or other papers, prior to the acquiring or conveying of real estate in California. While the Foreign Corporations Act does provide certain penalties in the event that a foreign corporation begins to do business in this state without having complied with the provisions of the act, we find nothing therein which would support the action instituted by the plaintiffs. The trial court having found that the defendant corporation was not doing business within the state, that it had simply purchased a piece of mining ground, consideration of authorities of other states where the statutes are different in this particular would simply be a waste of time. We need only to cite one California case, that of General Conference of Free Baptists v. Berkey, 156 Cal. 466, 105 P. 411, which holds that the simple purchase of real property is not doing business. Thus, in this case, if the mining company intended to carry on mining operations, it would be doing business when it began such work, but as the findings show it simply bought a piece of real estate, the case we have cited is conclusive.

The appeal is absolutely without merit, and the judgment is affirmed.

Action to quiet title by E. F. Loescher, trustee for Jack Loescher, against G. A. Whipple. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

A. M. Drew, of Fresno, for appellant.

N. Lindsay South, of Fresno, for respondent.

McKENZIE, Justice pro tem.

[1] For two years prior to the 5th of September, 1924, Katie Loescher had in her custody a grandson nine years of age named Jack Loescher. It is not clear why the boy was living with his grandmother instead of with his father, E. F. Loescher. The boy was somewhat mentally deficient, and the grandmother appears to have been very solicitous of his future welfare; and having in mind that he might never be capable of providing for himself, she conceived the idea of giving the boy, through the medium of a trustee, a productive tract of land in Fresno county, consisting of about forty acres. This plan of making provision for her unfortunate grandchild had been in Mrs. Loescher's mind for some time, and on the 5th day of September, 1924, she caused to be executed a deed, which conveyed the real property involved in this action to her son, E. F. Loescher, who is the father of Jack Loescher. On the same day and as part of the same transaction, but by separate instrument, a declaration of trust relating to this property was executed by E. F. Loescher, as trustee, and Jack Loescher was named therein as beneficiary. The trust agreement was evidently prepared by one who had knowledge of such matters, and it fully provides for the management of the property by the trustee and the payment of the proceeds to the beneficiary. There is only one feature of this trust agreement which calls for special attention, and this is occasioned by appellants' contention that the trust is invalid for the reason, as stated by appellant, "It is void for uncertainty as to the subject and purpose of the trust." Appellant's contention that the trust agreement is invalid was asserted by way of demurrer and by objecting to its introduction in evidence. The trial court ruled against this contention, and appellant now complains of error in this particular. This issue can be quite appropriately disposed of at this point.

That portion of the trust agreement in question reads as follows: "Said conveyance, to wit, said deed which is hereby referred to and by reference made a part of this Declaration of Trust, is for the purpose of providing for Jack Loescher, the minor child of Trustee

§ For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

★ Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

E. F. Loescher, and child being of the age of nine years, said child hereinafter called and referred to as Beneficiary.

"The term of this trust and duration of the same is agreed to be until said Beneficiary shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years, at which time said property remaining in the hands of said Trustee may be conveyed and transferred to said minor child if in the opinion of said Trustee such should be done, said Trustor leaving it entirely in said Trustee with full discretionary power to at said time convey all property remaining under this trust to said Beneficiary, or to continue to use and handle said property. * * *

If we understand appellant's position correctly, his claim is that the discretionary power given the trustee to convey when the beneficiary attained the age of twenty-one years, or at some time later, or perchance not at all, renders the trust invalid.

We find nothing in the authorities cited by counsel to sustain his contention. On the other hand, in re Marshall's Estate, 147 Pa. 77, 23 A. 391, and Cutter v. Hardy, 48 Cal. 568, such a discretionary power was considered legal. The deed and the trust agreement show that the trustor absolutely parted with all her interest in the property and the title immediately vested in the beneficiary, subject, of course, to the trustee's legal title and the trust provisions.

[2] In July, 1927, the respondent commenced this action against defendant G. A. Whipple to the end that plaintiff's title to the property in question might be quieted. Defendant answered and likewise filed a cross-complaint against plaintiff and Katie Loescher, the aforesaid trustor. The cross-complaint is very voluminous and sets forth in detail a number of transactions which finally resulted in an execution sale to defendant of the trust property involved in this action. The following summary of the contents of the cross-complaint is sufficient to give an understanding of defendant's claim of title.

In March, 1922, Katie Loescher exchanged some property in San Jose for some land in Santa Cruz upon which defendant Whipple had a trust deed to secure the payment of $4,500. In the trade, Mrs. Loescher agreed in writing to assume this indebtedness which was owing by the Hendersons, with whom Mrs. Loescher had exchanged properties. Mrs. Loescher prior to May, 1924, paid on this trust deed between eight and nine hundred dollars. In May, 1924, the Santa Cruz property was sold under the trust deed, and Whipple became the purchaser for the sum of $2,000. After crediting this amount on the note secured by said trust deed, there remained a deficiency of $2,786.83. Defendant alleged that Mrs. Loescher had knowledge of this deficiency; Mrs. Loescher denied this, and the court found she did not have knowledge of it. On September 22, 1924, Whipple commenced suit in Santa Clara county to recover the trust deed deficiency from the Hendersons and Mrs. Loescher, but the court found that Mrs. Loescher had no knowledge of this suit or that Whipple expected her to pay this deficiency until after the 1st day of October, 1924. In this action, Whipple obtained judgment against Mrs. Loescher in the sum of $2,976.44. In January, 1926, a writ of execution was issued to enforce this judgment, and by virtue of this writ all Mrs. Loescher's interest in the property in question was sold by the sheriff of Fresno county to Whipple for the sum of $2,000, and subsequently Whipple obtained a deed for the property. The present action was instituted by plaintiff to clear the cloud caused by the sheriff's deed to Whipple.

The trial court found that the proceedings leading up to the sheriff's deed to Whipple were regular, and if Mrs. Loescher had any interest in the property at the time execution was levied such interest would pass to him.

[3, 4] The legal validity of the trust deed and the regularity of the sheriff's deed having been disposed of, there remains but one issue to consider and that is: Was the trust deed made in fraud of creditors? Such fraud may be actual, that is, by intent to defraud; or it may be constructive, as when one is generous before he is just and gives away his property without retaining enough to pay his creditors. The trial court found that Mrs. Loescher did not execute the deed with intent to defraud any creditor, and the court further found that at the time the deed was made Mrs. Loescher was not insolvent nor did she become insolvent by making a gift of this property. It is true that Mrs. Loescher's remaining assets, that is, the property she still owned after disposing of the trust property, depreciated greatly in value shortly after the making of the trust deed, but this in itself would not work retroactively. Evans v. Sparks, 170 Cal. 532, 150 P. 372.

It would take a great amount of space to recite the evidence and comment on the conclusions that might be drawn from the facts and circumstances shown by the record, and in the end it would serve no useful purpose. We deem it only necessary to say that after a careful reading of the entire record we are of the opinion that the findings of the trial court to the effect that the trust deed was not made in fraud of creditors were fully justified by the evidence.

[5] There remains for consideration the court's action in denying appellant's motion for a new trial. This motion was predicated upon Mrs. Loescher's testimony concerning what property she owned at certain times. The case was tried on March 29, 1928. In October, 1927, Mrs. Loescher's deposition was taken, and at that time she was interrogated about certain real property, and then, without any reference to personal property, the following question was asked and answered: "Q. And did you have any other property than the Norris Colony property and this property I have just described, at that time? A. No sir, that is all the property I had." At the trial Mrs. Loescher, when asked concerning what property she had remaining after the trust deed was made, stated that she had notes, stock, money, etc., of the value of between fifteen and twenty thousand dollars. Counsel's position is that when he came into court he relied upon the former statement of Mrs. Loescher and was taken by surprise. He intimated at the trial he was taken by surprise, but he did not request a continuance, nor after the case was submitted did he ask to have the submission set aside so that he could present additional evidence. He waited until findings were signed and judgment entered, and then made a motion for a new trial which was based on the affidavits of Whipple and his attorney who tried the case. Counter affidavits were filed by respondent and his attorney. The affidavits are lengthy and complicated, and it would take much space to analyze them. We have read them, and conclude the counter affidavits have more convincing force. Moreover, counsel for respondent in his affidavit alleges that several weeks before the trial he furnished counsel for appellant with a list of the properties Mrs. Loescher had at the time the trust deed was made. We cannot say, as a matter of law, the trial court abused its discretion in refusing a new trial.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

MEYER v. STATE LAND SETTLEMENT BOARD.

Civ. 3997.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 19, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨374(4) — Supersedeas — State land settlement board — Public corporation.

Although state land settlement board was never charged with performance of governmental functions, it is essentially public, as regards requirement of supersedeas bond on appeal (Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 8008; Pol. Code, §§ 361e, 361f, added and amended).

The state land settlement board was created and constituted body corporate by St. 1917, p. 1566 (Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 8008). Under Pol. Code, §§ 361e, 361f, as added by St. 1927, pp. 942, 943, and amended by St. 1929, p. 677, the board and all its officers were superseded by the department of agriculture and certain state officers acting ex officio. Under the original act, St. 1917, p. 1567, § 4, as amended by St. 1919, p. 839, § 2, the board was authorized to acquire property "on behalf of the state."

2. Appeal and error ⇨374(4) — State land settlement board — Giving supersedeas bond.

In action against state land settlement board which appealed from adverse judgment, no supersedeas bond was required (Code Civ. Proc. § 1058).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1058, exempts state, or people of state, or any state officer in his official capacity, from giving bond or undertaking.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨1038 — Execution — Property held in proprietary capacity.

Property held for proprietary purposes by municipal corporation may be subjected to levy and sale under execution.

4. States ⇨213 — Judgment against state — Execution.

Judgment against state merely assesses damages, and, in absence of statute, cannot be collected by execution against state or its property.

Action by A. H. Meyer against the State Land Settlement Board, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Application for writ of supersedeas to the superior court to stay execution and garnishment pending appeal.

Writ granted.

See, also, 278 P. 452.

Ware & Ware, of Chico, for plaintiff.

Bond & Deirup, of Chico, U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen.; and Frank English and Charles A. Wetmore, Jr., Deputy Attys. Gen., for defendant.

PLUMMER, J.

While this action is before us upon appeal, we have here only to consider the petition of the defendant and appellant for a writ of supersedeas pending appeal.

The record shows that in the above-entitled action a judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff in the trial court for the sum of $9,500 and costs, from which judgment the defendant has appealed. Not having given any stay bond, the plaintiff took out and placed in the hands of the sheriff of Butte county an execution, under which the sheriff proceeded to levy upon certain lands described in the petition, and also proceeded to serve a garnishment upon the First National Trust & Savings Bank of Chico, purporting to levy upon all moneys, effects, and credits in said bank under the control of the state land settlement board, the levy and garnishment herein referred to being made upon the theory that the lands described and the moneys referred to were subject to execution. In the matter now before us it is urged by the petitioner that, under the provisions of section 1058 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no undertaking to stay execution in this action is requisite, and, further, that the properties referred to belong to the state of California, and therefore are not subject to execution.

An answer to these questions requires a résumé of the acts of the Legislature relative to the state land settlement board, and the purposes for which the board was created.

[1] The act of the Legislature approved June 1, 1917 (St. 1917, p. 1566, Act No. 8008, Deering's General Laws), sets forth in the first section that the land settlement problem is of great importance to the welfare of the people of the state of California; that it is the purpose of the act to improve the general economic and social conditions of agricultural settlers within the state. This act was amended from time to time, but the essential purposes so declared have remained unchanged by any of the subsequent enactments.

Section 2 of the act, in order to carry out the objects thereof, created a state land settlement board to consist of five members to be appointed by the Governor. This provision has been amended from time to time, as will hereafter appear. Provision is then made for the designation of one of the members as chairman of the board, the employment of a secretary, and such other expert technical and clerical assistants as might be required; the compensation of the officers to be fixed by the board of control, with the approval of the Governor.

Section 3 of the act sets forth that: "The state land settlement board, hereafter called the board, shall constitute a body corporate with the right on behalf of the state to hold property, receive and request donations, sue and be sued, and all other rights provided by the constitution and laws of the State of California as belonging to bodies corporate."

The different sections of the act then provide for carrying the same into execution relative to the selection of lands, purchase of lands, sale of lands, etc., setting forth in great detail all of the acts which the board so created was empowered to perform.

Then follows section 25, making appropriation of the sum of $260,000, out of any moneys of the state treasury, not otherwise appropriated. This section contains the following: "Of this amount, the sum of two hundred fifty thousand dollars shall constitute a revolving fund to be known as the 'land settlement fund,' which is calculated to be returned to the state with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum within a period of fifty years from the date of the passage of this act," etc.

By an act of the Legislature approved May 16, 1927 (St. 1927, p. 943), the position of all the officers of the state land settlement board was abolished and, by section 361f of the act referred to, it was provided that the department of agriculture should succeed to, and was vested with all the duties, powers, purposes, responsibilities, and jurisdiction of, the state land settlement board, and of the several members, officers, deputies, and employees thereof. It was further provided that all the duties, responsibilities, and powers that had theretofore devolved upon the state land settlement board were transferred to the department of agriculture. This section contains, in addition to what we have said, the following: "For the purposes of this article, the terms 'State Land Settlement Board,' 'member of State Land Settlement Board,' or similar designation shall be construed to mean and refer to the Department of Agriculture."

Section 361e of the act just referred to, for the purposes of carrying out the functions and completing the work of the state land settlement board, specified that the board should thereafter consist of three members, to wit, the director of agriculture, state engineer, and the director of finance of the state of California, all acting ex officio.

Section 361f, to which we have referred, was again amended by an act of the Legislature, approved May 20, 1929 (St. 1929, p. 677). Likewise, section 361e of the act referred to was amended at the same time so as to provide that thereafter the persons having charge of the state land settlement affairs should be the director of finance, the director of public works, and the director of agriculture, all acting ex officio. This act has in view the closing up of the business affairs of the state land settlement board.

Section 4 of the original act (as amended St. 1919, p. 839, § 2) provided for the state land settlement board acquiring property for the state, the language of the section, in this particular, reading: "For the purposes of this act, the board may acquire on behalf of the state by purchase, gift or the exercise of the power of eminent domain," etc.

By the acts referred to, and especially section 361f, supra, at the time of the beginning of this action, the term "State Land Settlement Board" was defined to be the department of agriculture, and the use of those words would be held to be the same and mean the same as the words "Department of Agriculture." In other words, the use of the expression "State Land Settlement Board" legally meant the department of agriculture. From this it follows that the title in this action, using the state land settlement board, must be held to be the same as though the title read "Department of Agriculture," and of which, so far as the functions of the state land settlement board were to be performed, devolved upon three state officers, to wit, the director of public works, the director of finance, and the director of agriculture. Section 4 of the act, as we have shown, provided for the acquiring of property in behalf of the state. There is no provision in the act as originally adopted or as set forth in any of the amendments thereto, under and by virtue of which the state land settlement board or the department of agriculture, or any of the state officers charged with the duties to be performed under the acts referred to, could acquire any interest or ownership whatsoever in either the lands or the moneys controlled by them in carrying out the purposes of the act. It will also be observed that, while the Legislature declared the state land settlement board to be a body corporate, it is only a corporation by virtue of legislative fiat, having no articles of incorporation or other rules governing its procedure, other than as set forth in the various sections of the act charging individual officers with the performance of the duties therein specified. There is nothing in the act, or any of the amendments thereto, giving the state land settlement board the powers and functions of a private corporation, in the sense that it has any ownership or interest whatever in any property upon which the board was required to administer. While the state land settlement board, as a corporate body, has not at any time been charged with the performance of any governmental function, it is essentially public in its nature, in that it is called upon to deal only with property belonging solely to the state of California. While its duties were proprietary in character, the board had no proprietary interest or ownership. In these respects it possessed none of the attributes of either a private or a municipal corporation, and therefore the principles of law relating to the acts of private corporations or municipalities acting in a proprietary capacity, controlling property of which such corporations are owners, are wholly inapplicable. It may be said that the state land settlement board, as a body corporate, is only a legal fiction or a convenience by means of which the state could embark in a colonization or land settlement experiment.

In addition to the original appropriation made by the Legislature, the record shows that large sums of money have been advanced under successive acts of the Legislature, from time to time, and that all of the money entering and invested in the enterprise came from funds, so far as the record shows, belonging to the state of California. That no other than the state of California has any ownership in the property involved in this action will further appear by reference to the case of State Land Settlement Board v. Henderson, 197 Cal. 470, 241 P. 560. In this action it was held that all lands held by the state for settlement under the terms of the acts to which we have referred belonged to the state and were exempt from taxation under section 1 of article 13 of the Constitution.

[2] We may now consider the provisions of section 1058 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section reads: "In any civil action or proceeding wherein the state, or the people of the state, is a party plaintiff, or any state officer, in his official capacity or on behalf of the state, or any county, city and county, city, or town, is a party plaintiff or defendant, no bond, written undertaking, or security can be required of the state, or the people thereof, or any officer thereof, or of any county, city and county, city, or town; but on complying with the other provisions of this code the state, or the people thereof, or any state officer acting in his official capacity, have the same rights, remedies, and benefits as if the bond, undertaking, or security were given and approved as required by this code." As we have seen, the state is the real party in interest in this action. It is the state's property only that is involved. And as we have further seen, even though the title of this action reads against the state land settlement board, it is in law and in fact against the department of agriculture. In other words, against the state of California, by and through its department of agriculture; and as we have further seen, is represented, for the purposes of the act in question, by three state officers, and their acting, by virtue of their official capacity, on behalf of the state. The state land settlement board, as a corporate entity, is not acting at all; as a corporate entity, its functions are ended, save and except as the requirements of the several acts necessitate the continuance of the legal fiction in order that the agricultural adventure of the state may be brought to a close. Even the name "Land Settlement Board" has been, by legislative act, transmuted into the meaning of "Department of Agriculture." The officers of the state land settlement board no longer exist. State officers only, in their official capacity as ex officio, are administering the affairs of the business herein referred to, and are doing so in behalf of the state. While the section does not exempt, in so many words, the state from giving an undertaking on appeal when it is a party defendant, it has been so construed. San Francisco Law & Collection Co. v. State, 141 Cal. 354, 74 P. 1047. Likewise, it is held that no undertaking on appeal is required of an officer of a county, city, or town when such officer represents his county, city, or town.

Lamberson v. Jefferds, 116 Cal. 492, 48 P. 485.

By virtue of the different provisions of the acts of the Legislature to which we have referred, three state officers are, in fact, acting in their official capacity in behalf of the state. They are acting under the legal designation of the department of agriculture, which includes the title used in this cause, and these three state officers are acting as fully and completely, under the designation of "Department of Agriculture," as though they appeared in their individual names. In this particular the law will regard the substance of the controversy. The fact that state property alone is involved, and the fact that officers of the state are acting in behalf thereof, even though the designation does not reveal the true identities, does not render section 1058 of the Code of Civil Procedure inapplicable. We see no escape from the conclusion that section 1058 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be construed as applying to actions such as are here presented, and that no stay bond is necessary.

[3] There is a further reason why the writ of supersedeas should be issued in this case. The existence of the levy and the garnishment tends to hinder and embarrass the department of agriculture in the administration and disposal of property belonging to the state. In an elaborate argument the respondent has set forth numerous authorities, to the effect that property held by corporations and used in a proprietary capacity may be levied upon and sold under execution. The basis for this argument is found in 23 C. J. 355, § 105, where the rule relied upon is stated as follows: "Where property of a municipal or other public corporation is sought to be subjected to execution to satisfy judgments recovered against such corporation, the question as to whether such property is leviable or not is to be determined by the usage and purposes for which it is held. The rule is that property held for public uses, such as public buildings, streets, squares, parks, promenades, wharves, landing places, etc., and generally everything held for governmental purposes, is not subject to levy and sale under execution against such corporation. * * * But where a municipal corporation or county owns, in its proprietary as distinguished from its public or governmental capacity, property not useful or used for a public purpose, but for quasi private purposes, the general rule is that such property may be seized and sold under execution against the corporation precisely as similar property of individuals is seized and sold." Numerous cases are cited supporting the text just quoted. There can be no question, but that the law set forth by respondent, and the cases cited, amply uphold the doctrine that property held for proprietary purposes by a municipality may be subjected to levy and sale under execution, and with the doctrine set forth in the cases cited by respondent we fully agree, but, so far as applied to the case at bar, the whole argument is based upon a false premise. The state land settlement board never did, does not now, nor did any of the officers at any time mentioned in the acts, nor do any of the officers mentioned in the act as it now stands, own any interest in or to the property sought to be levied upon in this action. It is the property of the state that is sought to be subjected to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, through the medium of an execution.

Similar questions have been presented and decided adversely to the respondent's contention, both by the Supreme Court and by the District Court of Appeal of this state. In San Francisco Savings Union v. Reclamation District, 144 Cal. 639, 79 P. 374, where it was sought to enforce a judgment against the reclamation district by execution, it was held that such proceeding was inadmissible, and that the only remedy was by way of mandamus to require the levy of an assessment.

In People v. Honey Lake Valley Irrigation District, 77 Cal. App. 367, 246 P. 819, 821, this court, speaking through Presiding Justice Finch, said: "Had the appellants been given judgment in this action, such judgment could not be enforced by execution against the district, but only by a suit in mandamus against the board of supervisors to compel the levying of an assessment to raise money with which to pay their claims"—citing authorities.

[4] As stated in Westinghouse Electric Co. v. Chambers, 169 Cal. 131, 145 P. 1025, 1026, the general rule is well established that "a judgment against the state, in cases wherein the state has permitted actions to be maintained against it, merely liquidates and establishes the claim against the state, and that, in the absence of an express statute so providing, such judgment cannot be collected by execution against the state or its property," etc. We do not need to cite the authorities, which are legion, to the effect that, where state property is held in trust, such property cannot be taken and sold upon execution. Our attention has been called to no act, and we have been unable to find any act of the Legislature authorizing state property to be sold upon execution, whether such property is used either in a governmental or in a proprietary character. The purpose or capacity in which state property is held does not, so far as we have been able to ascertain, alter the rule that state property cannot be levied upon and sold, save and except as permitted by the Legislature, and not being permitted, it cannot be done.

Here, again, we may refer to the case of State Land Settlement Board v. Henderson, supra, wherein it is held that the property referred to in the land settlement acts which we have cited is state property. The reasoning of that case is full and complete, and is decisive as to the ownership of the property involved herein.

Without further citation of authorities, we are satisfied that the petition of the defendant and appellant should be granted, and a writ of supersedeas issued herein as prayed for. And it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

HAWKINS v. HAWKINS.

Civ. 4035.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 20, 1930.

1. Divorce ⇨130 — Extreme cruelty — Proof.

If corroborated facts establish extreme cruelty within statute, decree of divorce is justified and failure to prove other cruelties alleged is immaterial (Civ. Code, § 94).

Civ. Code, § 94, defines "extreme cruelty" as the wrongful infliction of grievous bodily injury, or grievous mental suffering by one party to marriage upon the other.

2. Divorce ⇨150(2) — Extreme cruelty — Findings — Surplusage.

If corroborated facts establish extreme cruelty within statute as justifying divorce, other findings are surplusage (Civ. Code, § 94).

3. Divorce ⇨49(5) — Condonation — Extreme cruelty.

That wife agreed to return to husband for children's sake and cohabited with husband one night in hotel held not to consummate condonation of husband's cruelty (Civ. Code, §§ 111, 115, 116).

Civ. Code, § 111, provides that a divorce will be denied upon showing of condonation, and "condonation" is defined by section 115 as the conditional forgiveness of a matrimonial offense constituting cause for divorce. Section 116 provides that knowledge on part of condoner of facts constituting cause of divorce, reconciliation or remission of offense by injured party, and restoration of offending party to all marital rights, are necessary requirements to condonation.

4. Husband and wife ⇨1 — "Marital rights."

"Marital rights" as distinguished from "marital relations" include enjoyment of association, sympathy, confidence, domestic happiness, common dwelling, eating together, profiting by joint property rights and intimacies of domestic relations (Civ. Code, § 116).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Marital Rights," see Words and Phrases.]

5. Divorce ⇨49(5) — Extreme cruelty — "Condonation" — Sexual intercourse.

"Condonation" by offended spouse of acts of extreme cruelty is not accomplished by sexual intercourse alone (Civ. Code, §§ 111, 115, 116).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Condone; Condonation," see Words and Phrases.]

6. Trial ⇨397(4) — Findings — Necessity — Evidence.

It is unnecessary to adopt findings relative to issue having no adequate support in evidence.

7. Divorce ⇨184(12) — Harmless error — Finding.

Failure to adopt findings on issue of condonation in divorce action held not reversible error where finding would necessarily be adverse to appellant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Action for divorce by Hazel L. Hawkins against John H. Hawkins. From an adverse decree, the defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

J. C. Webster, of Sonora, for appellant.

R. R. Fowler and F. O. Hoover, both of Modesto, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J.

The plaintiff was awarded a decree of divorce from the defendant on the ground of extreme cruelty. She was also given the custody of their two minor children. The answer alleged condonation as a special defense, upon which issue the court failed to adopt a finding. This is assigned as a ground for reversal. The appellant also contends that the court's finding that he had denied the paterinity of one of his children is not supported by the evidence, for the reason that it lacks corroboration.

[1, 2] It is not contended that other acts of cruelty are not amply supported by the evidence. It is not necessary that all the alleged acts of cruelty shall be corroborated or even proved. It is enough if the facts which are corroborated fulfill the definition of extreme cruelty as it appears in section 94 of the Civil Code, and justify the entry of a decree of divorce on that ground. Other findings may be disregarded as surplusage. Avery v. Avery, 148 Cal. 239, 82 P. 967; Hansen v. Hansen, 86 Cal. App. 744, 261 P. 503; 19 C. J. 134, § 349; 9 R. C. L. 436, § 240.

[3] Upon the question of condonation the evidence is practically undisputed. On account of acts of alleged cruelty on the part of appellant the spouses were separated. Their home in Sonora was no longer maintained. The respondent was living in Oakland and was training to learn the art of hair dressing. Five days before the complaint in this action was filed the appellant visited his wife in Oakland and claims that a reconciliation was then reached, and that she condoned the alleged charges of cruelty. All that the record shows in this regard is that he visited his wife at the home of her sister in Berkeley and discussed their family affairs. He said: "We talked about the children, the home and where we would live. She said: 'For the sake of the children I'll try it,' and she agreed to return." That evening they went to a show together and that night they occupied a room together in an Oakland hotel, assuming the relationship of husband and wife. The appellant further says: "We talked about going back and living together and my wife and I expressly agreed with each other to condone and to resume marital relations."

The appellant then had no employment. He had no home to which he could take his wife and family. Except the one incident of cohabitation referred to there was no effort to restore marital rights. There was no subsequent cohabitation between the spouses. The following morning the respondent went to her mother's home at Turlock and never again saw her husband until the time of the trial. Within two or three days she telephoned him that she intended to make no further effort toward reconciliation. The complaint for divorce was immediately filed by her. The most that may be said regarding the issue of condonation in the present case is that the spouses discussed a reconciliation of their domestic troubles; that the respondent agreed to condone her husband's offenses and return to him "for the sake of the children," and that they went together to a show and slept together one night in a hotel. We are of the opinion this does not have the effect of consummating condonation.

A decree of divorce will be denied upon sufficient proof of condonation. Section 111, Civ. Code. Condonation is conditional forgiveness of a matrimonial offense which would otherwise furnish ground for a divorce. Section 115, Civ. Code. To consummate the defense of condonation it is necessary that the aggrieved spouse should (1) have knowledge of the facts constituting the cause for divorce (2) that reconciliation be accomplished and remission of the offense be granted, and that (3) the offending party be restored to all marital rights. Section 116, Civ. Code.

[4] It is doubtful whether the facts of this case adequately show reconciliation and remission on the part of the respondent. Her statement that she would "try" returning to the appellant "for the sake of the children" indicates a lack of forgiveness on her part. The fact that she immediately returned to her mother at Turlock and promptly filed a suit for divorce within a few days after their interview seems to refute the idea of reconciliation or remission. But assuming that the statement which was testified to by the appellant that they agreed "to condone and to resume marital relations" sufficiently fulfills the requirement of the statute with respect to reconciliation and remission, still there is an absence of evidence of "restoration of the offending party to all marital rights," unless it may be said that a single act of cohabitation of the spouses, which is accomplished in the rented room of a hotel, fulfills this requirement. We think it is insufficient under the circumstances of this case to constitute a consummation of condonation. The statute requires a restoration to all marital rights. It is not claimed there was a restoration to any marital rights in the present case, except the right of cohabitation on a single occasion. There is a clear distinction between the ordinary construction of the term "marital relations" and the statutory term of "all marital rights." The conjugal rights of married persons include the enjoyment of association, sympathy, confidence, domestic happiness, the comforts of dwelling together in the same habitation, eating meals at the same table, and profiting by the joint property rights as well as the intimacies of domestic relations.

[5] It has been repeatedly held that condonation of acts of extreme cruelty is not accomplished by sexual intercourse alone. Bohnert v. Bohnert, 95 Cal. 444, 30 P. 590; Weber v. Weber, 195 Mo. App. 126, 189 S. W. 577; 19 C. J. 87, § 201; Beebe v. Beebe, 174 App. Div. 408, 160 N. Y. S. 967; Martin v. Martin, 151 La. 530, 92 So. 46; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 34 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 346; Gardner v. Gardner, 2 Gray (Mass.) 434; Phillips v. Phillips, 1 Ill. App. 245; Kennedy v. Kennedy, 87 Ill. 250. Most of the foregoing cases hold that a single act of cohabitation is insufficient to support a claim of condonation of acts of cruelty, unless it is accompanied by other acts indicating an intention to forgive the offenses and to restore the offender to all marital rights. A distinction is drawn as to the effect of a single act of intercourse upon the defense of condonation of a cause of action founded on adultery and one which is based upon extreme cruelty. The cases also make proper allowance for the submission of the wife to the importunities or dominance of the husband on the theory that he is more forceful. In the case of Bohnert v. Bohnert, 95 Cal. 444, 30 P. 590, it is said: "Under our statute, one of the requirements necessary to condonation is 'restoration of the offending party to all marital rights' (section 116, Civil Code), and this requirement is not proved by evidence of sexual intercourse alone." This is particularly true when but a single act of intercourse is accomplished under such circumstances as are presented in the present case.

[6, 7] Where there is no adequate evidence to support an issue in the trial of a case, it becomes unnecessary to adopt findings with relation thereto. A failure to adopt findings upon the issue of condonation in the present case is not reversible error, since the record would have required a finding adverse to the appellant. 24 Cal. Jur. 945, § 189; White v. White, 82 Cal. 427, 452, 23 P. 276, 7 L. R. A. 799; Smith v. Smith, 119 Cal. 183, 48 P. 730, 51 P. 183; Malooof v. Malooof, 175 Cal. 571, 166 P. 330; Wolverton v. Wolverton, 163 Ind. 26, 71 N. E. 123.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. DAWSON.★

Cr. 1924.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 29, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 10, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court April 28, 1930.

1. Statutes §71, 77(1) — Special legislation — Uniformity.

Statute applying equally to all within natural class is not special legislation or void as not operating uniformly.

2. Statutes §74(1), 86 — Classification of crimes — Felonies and misdemeanors.

Statutory distinction between felonies and misdemeanors is natural and reasonable classification, not violating constitutional provisions against special legislation, or lack of uniformity (Pen. Code, §§ 17, 1387).

Pen. Code, § 17, defines felony as crime punishable by death or imprisonment in state prison and every other crime as misdemeanor, while section 1387 provides that dismissal of misdemeanor charge shall operate as bar to prosecution for same offense.

3. Criminal law §178 — Dismissal of felony charge — Delaying trial — Subsequent prosecution.

Order dismissing felony information for delay in bringing defendant to trial did not bar subsequent prosecution for same offense (Pen. Code, §§ 1382, 1387).

Pen. Code, § 1382, requires that action be dismissed if not brought to trial within 60 days after filing of information, unless good cause to contrary be shown.

4. Criminal law §1202(1) — Prior conviction — Service of term — Pleading and proof.

To establish prior conviction of felony, prosecution must plead and prove that defendant served term in penal institution (Pen. Code, § 667).

Pen. Code, § 667, provides that one committing crime after having been convicted of offense punishable by imprisonment in state prison and "served a term therefor in any penal institution" is punishable as therein provided.

5. Criminal law §1202(6) — Judgment — Conviction of forgery — Prior conviction — Sentence — Validity.

Judgment ordering imprisonment "for the term prescribed by law" after reciting conviction of forgery and prior conviction of felony, without reciting service of term in penal institution, held not void as imposing too severe punishment (Pen. Code, § 667).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

James H. Dawson was convicted of forgery, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

John F. Groene, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Belford, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J.

By an information filed in the superior court, defendant was charged with the crime of forgery; also, that before the commission of such offense he had been convicted of another felony on which judgment had been pronounced, which latter charge defendant admitted. It is asserted by appellant that, following his conviction of the offense of forgery, judgment was pronounced by the trial court against him, not only on his conviction of the crime of forgery, but as well under the provisions of section 667 of the Penal Code, as for one who theretofore had been convicted of a felony and had served a term therefor in a penal institution.

In substance, it is first contended by appellant that the provisions of section 1387 of the Penal Code to the effect that an order for the dismissal of an action "is a bar to any other prosecution for the same offense, if it is a misdemeanor," but shall not constitute a bar to a further prosecution if the offense charged be a felony, is special and class legislation, and consequently unconstitutional and void, for the reason that if it be the law that a dismissal of an indictment or an information by which a defendant was charged with the commission of a felony does not bar a subsequent prosecution of the defendant for an offense identical with that originally charged against him, the effect is that upon the dismissal of a felony information, which is followed by a prosecution for an offense identical with that charged in the original information, the defendant is denied a speedy and public trial as guaranteed to him by article 6 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, as well as by article 1, § 13, of the Constitution of this state, and section 686 of the Penal Code.

In substance, section 1382 of the Penal Code provides that, unless good cause to the contrary be shown, the action against the defendant must be dismissed if not brought to trial within sixty days "after the finding of the indictment, or filing of the information." Matter of Ford, 160 Cal. 334, 338, 116 P. 757, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 882, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1267.

[1, 2] By the record herein, it appears that defendant was actually brought to trial on the original information filed against him, but that, before the jury was impaneled in the action, "defendant did make his motion before said court to dismiss the said information and cause, and to discharge said defendant upon the ground that defendant, James H. Dawson, was not brought to trial within the time limited by law, and that he was not given a speedy trial," etc., which said motion was granted. In such circumstances, it would appear that defendant is in no position now to complain that he was not prosecuted under the original information. Furthermore, in the case of People v. Palassou, 14 Cal. App. 123, 111 P. 109, where a similar situation obtained, it was held that the fact that on the defendant's own motion he was discharged and the information dismissed because he had not been brought to trial within sixty days, as required by law, did not constitute a bar to a further prosecution under a new information for the same offense. However, appellant argues that because section 1387 of the Penal Code provides that the dismissal of a misdemeanor charge against a defendant shall operate as a bar "to any other prosecution for the same offense," the same rule should obtain where the defendant is charged with the commission of a felony; otherwise, in addition to the point that the statute constitutes special and class legislation, appellant contends that the statute is not uniform in its operation, convicts the defendant without due process of law, and denies to him the equal protection of the laws, in that the statute discriminates in favor of a defendant who may have committed a misdemeanor, as against one who may have committed a felony. The several questions thus presented may be reduced to the single inquiry as to whether offenses against the body politic may be legally divided into the two classes of misdemeanors and felonies, and procedure enacted which will be applicable to persons who are charged with the commission of the one class of criminal offenses and not be applicable to the other. A general rule, and one which has been so universally followed as to require no citation of authority therefor, is that, where a statute is made to apply equally as to all persons embraced within a natural class, the constitutional provisions directed against special legislation, lack of uniformity in the operation of the law, and the like, are not violated. From a consideration of section 17 of the Penal Code, which includes the statement that a felony is a crime which is punishable with death, or by imprisonment in the state prison, and that every other crime is a misdemeanor, it becomes apparent that as to the punishment or penalty which is to be imposed for a violation of the penal laws of the state, the Legislature by its enactment of the statute has recognized a distinction in degree as between or among different kinds of penal offenses. That such a classification is a natural one, not arbitrary, but based upon valid reasons and distinctions, and consequently not violative of the several constitutional provisions to which reference has been had, may be inferred from analogous adjudications by the Supreme Court of this state. People v. Finley, 153 Cal. 59, 94 P. 248; People v. Quijada, 154 Cal. 243, 97 P. 689; People v. Carson, 155 Cal. 164, 99 P. 970; People v. Oppenheimer, 156 Cal. 733, 106 P. 74; Selowsky v. Superior Court of Napa County, 180 Cal. 404, 181 P. 652; People v. Camp, 42 Cal. App. 411, 183 P. 845; In re Todd, 44 Cal. App. 496, 186 P. 790. Moreover, the classification as recognized in section 1387 of the Penal Code has stood, practically unchanged and unchallenged, for seventy-nine years. Crim. Prac. Act, St. 1851, p. 279, sec. 599.

It would seem clear that, as compared one with the other, a given offense may not be so serious in its consequences as another specified offense. In other words, as between two distinct offenses, one may be insignificant as far as its effect upon the body politic is concerned, while the other may be so heinous in character that to its frequent and unchecked commission might be attributed the origin of a possible state-wide disaster, or, eventually, the downfall of organized society. Manifestly, as relates to the penalty for the infraction of criminal statutes, the segregation into one class of comparatively trivial offenses from those which are placed into a second class because of their more serious effect upon the morals, the safety, or the welfare of the community, is justified. That the lesser crimes should be denominated misdemeanors, and the greater, felonies, is of no consequence; nor does the fact that in its regulation, especially as it affects the dismissal of a prosecution for its commission, the one class is treated differently from the other, give occasion for any valid objection on the ground that such action amounts to an arbitrary or unreasonable discrimination. It is a most natural classification, and one which does no violence to constitutional guaranties.

[3] Appellant presents the specific point that the order of dismissal of the original action was final; also that it was appealable; and that it acted as a bar to further prosecution of the defendant for the same offense. It is apparent that the people accepted such order of dismissal as final. That the people attempted no appeal therefrom furnishes no ground for complaint on the part of defendant, and that such order did not bar a subsequent prosecution of defendant for the same offense is decided adversely to appellant's contention, first, by the provisions of section 1387 of the Penal Code, to which reference herein has been had; and, secondly, by the ruling in the case entitled In re Begetrow, 136 Cal. 293, 68 P. 773, 56 L. R. A. 528, in which it is also held that, by the prosecution of the defendant therein on the second information filed against him, no constitutional right of the defendant was invaded. See, also, People v. Palassou, 14 Cal. App. 123, 111 P. 109; People v. Ammerman, 118 Cal. 23, 50 P. 15.

[4] It is urged by appellant that the judgment pronounced against defendant was void for the reason that it imposed on him a more severe punishment for the crime of which he was convicted than is provided by the statute which specifically prescribes the penalty for the commission of such crime.

As hereinbefore intimated, by the information in the instant action defendant was "accused * * * of the crime of forgery; * * * and that before the commission of the offense charged, * * * the said defendant was * * * convicted of the crime of violation of section 146 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 564), a felony. * * *"

That part of the judgment of which appellant complains was as follows:

"* * * James H. Dawson having been duly found guilty in this court of the crime of forgery, a felony, as charged in the information, and having admitted prior conviction of a felony,

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said James H. Dawson be punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California at Folsom for the term prescribed by law."

In part, section 667 of the Penal Code provides that:

"Every person who, having been convicted of any offense punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, and having served a term therefor in any penal institution, commits any crime after such conviction, is punishable therefor as follows: * * *"

It will be noted that a part of the requisites to the imposition of the sentence of which complaint is herein made is that, following a prior conviction of an offense punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, the defendant must have "served a term therefor" in some penal institution; also, that the information herein was silent as to any allegation which related to any former service of a "term" by defendant in any penal institution; furthermore, that defendant pleaded guilty only to the charge of a prior conviction—which necessarily omitted the element of his having "served a term therefor in any penal institution."

Many authorities attest the rule that, in order to establish the prior conviction of a defendant of a felony, the statutory requirements must be fulfilled; that is to say, the necessary facts must be both pleaded and proved. People v. Coleman, 145 Cal. 609, 79 P. 283; People v. King, 64 Cal. 338, 30 P. 1028; People v. Wagner, 78 Cal. App. 504, 248 P. 946; People v. Wallach, 79 Cal. App. 605, 250 P. 578.

The opinion in the case of People v. Sampson (Cal. App.) 278 P. 492, contains a recognition of the fact that, in establishing a foundation for a valid judgment by which a more severe sentence may be imposed upon a defendant convicted of a criminal offense because of his prior conviction of a felony, it is essential that in some manner it appear that he has "served a term therefor" in some penal institution.

[5] It is clear that the duty of proving each of the statutory elements devolved upon the prosecution. Defendant pleaded guilty only to as great a charge as was contained in the information. Although it is manifest that a judgment by reason of which defendant would be subjected to punishment for the commission by him of the crime of forgery as severely as though both by the pleading and the proof in the action it appeared that theretofore he had been convicted of a felony, and had served a term therefor in some penal institution, would be violative of the rights of defendant; an examination of the judgment actually pronounced herein discloses that, after reciting the facts, to wit, that defendant had been convicted of the crime of forgery and that prior thereto he had been convicted of a felony, it was ordered that he be imprisoned "for the term prescribed by law." The attention of this court has been directed to no statute which, by its terms, purports to impose a more severe penalty on one convicted of a felony who theretofore simply has suffered a similar conviction, than is imposed upon one who never before has been convicted of a felony; and since the judgment herein contained no recital that following his conviction of a felony defendant had served a term therefor in a penal institution, the construction which should be placed upon the order contained in the judgment that defendant should be imprisoned "for the term prescribed by law," is that defendant be punished, not as prescribed by section 667 of the Penal Code, but only as is provided by the appropriate statute for a first offender convicted of the crime of forgery. So construed, as far as the point presented by appellant is concerned, the judgment is unexceptionable.

On examination of the record herein, this court is of the opinion that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury.

Following his conviction, defendant gave notice of appeal, not only from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial, but as well from several other orders which were incidental to the judgment.

It is ordered that the judgment as well as each of the several orders specified by defendant in his notice of appeal be, and they are, affirmed.

ALBERS v. SHELL CO. OF CALIFORNIA et al.*
Civ. 4026.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 28, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 26, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 26, 1930.

1. Negligence ⇨33(1) — Care — Due trespasser.

One owes duty only to abstain from willful or wanton conduct against trespasser.

2. Automobiles ⇨193(14) — Driver — Course of employment — Carrying friend — Expressly forbidden.

Driver of oil truck held not in course of employment in carrying passenger against employer's rules while making delivery.

3. Automobiles ⇨181(4) — Minor — Trespasser.

Minor over 20 years was in same class with ordinary trespasser when riding on truck against rules of its owner which he knew.

There was a sign immediately opposite the seat where minor sat which forbade any one except employee of company from riding on the truck.

4. Negligence ⇨11 — "Wantonness" — "Willfulness" — Defined.

"Wantonness" or "willfulness" are not negligence but indicate reckless conduct which has gone beyond negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Wantonness" and "Willfulness," see Words and Phrases.]

5. Automobiles ⇨245(24) — Defective steering wheel — Liability to trespasser — Willful and wanton act.

Driving truck without nut fastening steering wheel to steering post where wheel was apparently firmly attached held not to present jury question of willful or wanton act, as respects liability for death of trespasser.

Deceased rode on defendant's truck, of which deceased's friend was driver, knowing it was against the rules. Driver knew nut was off and had reported fact to repair shop which had done nothing about it. Driver had driven truck several days without this nut. Wheel was apparently tightly fastened to steering shaft without nut but going over slight bump became loose and truck ran off bridge.

6. Automobiles ⇨181(5) — Defective steering wheel — "Trap."

Absence of nut from steering wheel held not to be a "trap" which is a very dangerous construction or condition designedly arranged to do injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Trap," see Words and Phrases.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by John Albers against the Shell Company of California and another. From the judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Irving D. Gibson, of Sacramento, and Seth Millington, of Gridley, for appellants.

George F. Jones, of Oroville, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J.

The plaintiff had judgment against the defendants in an action prosecuted to recover damages for the death of his son, Winfrid Albers, by reason of the overturning of an oil truck belonging to the defendant corporation, and driven by the defendant Morton. From this judgment, the defendants appeal.

The cause of action is based upon the alleged operation of the truck referred to while the steering mechanism thereof was in a defective and dangerous condition.

The complaint alleges in substance: That by reason of the willful, wanton, and gross negligence of the defendants, the nut which holds the steering wheel in place upon the steering shaft of the truck was absent; that the absence of the retaining nut made it probable that a jolt or jar would detach the adjustment of the steering wheel from the steering post and cause loss of control of the truck; that knowing the existence of the dangerous and unsafe condition of said truck, the defendants carelessly, wantonly, and negligently caused said truck to be driven over a certain highway leading to a bridge crossing Cherokee channel in Butte county; that as the truck was being driven, upon the approach to said bridge, the steering wheel became detached, the truck unmanageable, and, as a consequence, broke through the railing of the bridge referred to and fell to the bed of the canal below, resulting in the death of Winfrid Albers, who was then and there riding upon said truck. While the complaint does not allege specifically that the defendants knew of any probability that the steering wheel would become detached and cause the driver to lose control of the truck by reason of the missing nut, it does set forth that the absence of the nut from the steering wheel made it probable that the steering wheel would become detached from the steering post and result in a loss of control of the management of the truck, and that the defendants, well knowing the existence of said dangerous and unsafe condition, carelessly, wantonly, etc., caused the truck to be driven, which brings home to the defendants the allegation of knowledge of the hazard of driving the truck with defective steering mechanism.

The record shows that the defendant Morton, on the day of the accident, was making his rounds in the delivery of gasoline and oil; that in so doing he stopped at a certain farmhouse where Winfrid Albers had been working. It appears that the defendant Morton and Albers had been acquainted and friends for some years; that the deceased Winfrid Albers, having in mind returning to the town of Biggs, without any invitation from the defendant Morton, got upon the truck to ride into town. The record shows that the allowing of anyone to ride on the truck, other than employees of the company, was against the rules, and that there was a brass plate upon the dashboard directly in front of where Albers had taken his seat, on which plate were the words "Authorized employees, only, allowed on this vehicle. Shell Company of California." It would appear also from the record that Albers and a bystander had a conversation before Albers mounted the truck, relative to the rules of the company against anyone riding with the driver, and was also offered a ride into town in a private conveyance. After taking his seat in the cab of the truck, as stated, the defendant Morton, with Albers sitting at his right, propelled the truck along the highway leading to the bridge referred to. It appears from the testimony of the driver that while the highway thus traveled was in a good condition, there were certain places where it was slightly rough. An examination of this testimony shows, however, that it was not such as to impede progress or cause any particular inconvenience to anyone using the highway. Just as the truck approached the Cherokee canal bridge, a slight jar was experienced caused by a slight roughness in the pavement, the steering wheel became detached from the steering post, the driver lost control of the truck, and it plunged through the railing of the bridge to the bed of the canal below. Just prior to reaching the bridge, the truck had been running at a speed of from 20 to 25 miles per hour. As it approached the rise to the bridge, the defendant Morton testified that he slowed down to between 15 and 20 miles per hour.

On the part of the plaintiff it is contended that the circumstances surrounding this case show wanton and gross negligence. On the part of the appellants it is contended that negligence only is shown, if at all, and that as Albers occupied the position of a trespasser upon the truck, no liability has been incurred on account of his death.

The testimony shows that the steering wheel was not placed upon the steering shaft by hydraulic pressure, but was fitted down over the tapering end of the shaft by the use of a hammer; that there was a slot in the steering shaft, and also in that part of the steering wheel which fitted over the steering shaft, into which a way-key was fitted. This, for the purpose of preventing the steering wheel turning upon the steering shaft. Then, to hold the wheel and the way-key in place, the nut referred to was screwed down upon the steering shaft, threads being cut in the steering shaft for that purpose. While the nut was in place, the way-key could not become disengaged, and the steering wheel would not turn upon the steering shaft. With the nut displaced, the natural jar of the truck might loosen the way-key, and likewise, tend to loosen the steering wheel from the steering shaft. In other words, the tapering end of the steering shaft and the tapering orifice in the steering wheel, fitting over the same, would not be so tightly engaged, nor would the way-key be so firmly fixed as to prevent loss of control of the truck. Two witnesses called by the plaintiff, who had had considerable experience in the handling of trucks of the same model as the one involved in this action, testified that the only appliance which held the steering wheel in place on the steering shaft was the nut referred to. The defendant Morton testified that he knew that the function of the nut referred to was to hold the steering wheel on the steering post; that the wheel was not very tight when it came off, or it would not have come off.

The testimony further shows that the taper fit on the steering post was to make it still more easily detachable; that while the nut was on the steering post, the wheel could not come off, and while the way-key was in the slot referred to, the steering wheel and the steering shaft would move in unison. The testimony further shows that by placing the steering wheel over the steering shaft, with the key in place, and tapping the wheel with a hammer, it would hold temporarily without the presence of the nut.

It appears from the record that the truck in question was examined by the jury; that the steering wheel had been replaced upon the steering post with the key in the key-way; and that it could not be lifted from the post at the time it was examined, but had to be tapped two or three times with a hammer before the steering wheel and steering post could be disengaged. The testimony does not show how the steering wheel was replaced upon the steering post, or just what force or hammering was used in replacing it after it had been disengaged at the time of the accident referred to. There was some testimony also introduced on the part of the defendants to the effect that the nut on the steering post above the steering wheel was not the only safety device; that without the nut, the tapering adjustment and the key referred to would suffice to control the movement of the truck.

The record further shows that the defendant Morton, the driver of the truck, had reported the loss of the nut from the steering post to the mechanic having charge of the division where the defendant Morton was employed, and that for three or four days he had been driving the truck with the nut missing; that nothing had been done, so far as the defendant Morton knew, toward replacing the nut; and further, that the truck had been kept at the company's garage and at a place where repairs were made. No question is raised as to the amount of the damages awarded.

The testimony further shows that while the deceased was a minor, he was nevertheless over the age of twenty years, and was seated immediately behind the sign on the dashboard in plain view thereof, whereon were the words to which we have referred, stating that only employees were allowed to ride upon the truck. In addition, the defendant Morton testified that he did not apprehend any danger from driving the truck with the nut missing from the top of the steering post. The superintendent of the auto department of the division of the Shell Company involved in this action, testified that the nut was only one of the safety factors; that the way-key and the tapering of the fitting parts between the steering wheel and the steering shaft were likewise safety factors, and when they were in proper position, the truck would respond to the turn of the wheel.

The record further shows that one of the witnesses for the plaintiff, named Hayes, tried to remove the steering wheel from the automobile while it was in the courtyard, and was unable to lift the wheel off the steering shaft, although he was a large man, six feet one inch in height and weighing about two hundred pounds, and it was necessary to take a hammer and strike the steering wheel from the under side, twice on one side of the steering post and once on the other side of the steering post.

Upon the record showing the foregoing facts, it is contended on the part of the appellants: That the driver Morton was acting outside the scope of his employment in transporting Albers upon the truck, in violation of the orders of his employer; that such transportation was solely for the accommodation and convenience of Albers, and not on any business of the company; that the evidence fails to show any willful or wanton act or omission on the part of the driver Morton, resulting in the death of Albers; that Albers was a trespasser upon the truck, and one as to whom no duty was owed; also, that the court committed prejudicial error in instructions to the jury concerning willful, wanton, and gross negligence.

[1] The law appears to be very well settled in this state that as to a trespasser, one owes a duty only to abstain from willful or wanton conduct. Giannini v. Campodonico, 176 Cal. 548, 169 P. 80; Gordon v. Roberts, 162 Cal. 506, 123 P. 288; Sessions v. S. P. Co., 159 Cal. 599, 114 P. 982. In support of their contentions, appellants cite the case of O'Leary v. Fash, 245 Mass. 123, 140 N. E. 282, 283, where it is held that a principal is not responsible for acts outside the real or apparent scope of authority, and that an invited guest riding on a truck could recover only in case of gross negligence. In the same case it is held, however, that a trespasser may recover for willful, wanton, and reckless misconduct. The facts of the O'Leary Case are as follows: The truck driver was engaged in delivering ice cream, and the driver, while in the course of his employment, was asked by the plaintiff and a companion for a ride; that the two got on the truck; that the plaintiff sat with her feet over the right-hand side of the truck, and there was nothing on the seat to keep her from falling off; she could hold on to the seat only with her right hand. The driver of the truck had proceeded about three-quarters of a mile, and just before coming to an intersecting street was driving at the rate of between forty and forty-five miles per hour, and without checking the speed of the truck, turned into an intersecting street, whereby the plaintiff was thrown from the truck and injured. Upon this statement the court said: "The plaintiff was a guest of the driver of the truck, who permitted her to ride with him gratuitously. As against him she could recover only by proof of gross negligence"—citing a number of authorities. "Her rights against the defendant can mount no higher." The defendant was the owner of the truck and the employer of the driver. The trial court directed the verdict for the defendant, and this action was affirmed upon appeal. While this decision is from one of the most learned and highly respected courts in the country, and appears to be supported by a number of previous decisions in the same state, we cannot agree with the holding of the court that the testimony did not present circumstances sufficient to go to the jury, on the issue of willful, wanton, and reckless conduct. Knowing the position of the plaintiff upon the seat beside him, the driver, with his truck speeding at the rate of between forty and forty-five miles per hour, suddenly turned it into an intersecting street. That this conduct was willful and intentional seems to us beyond question. He may not have intended to injure the plaintiff, but he certainly intended to perform the act which resulted in injury. That propelling an automobile in such a manner furnishes facts from which the jury might conclude that the driver was acting wantonly and recklessly, appears also to us as being very clearly shown.

In the case of Newlin v. Standard Oil Co., 122 Kan. 86, 251 P. 394, relied upon by appellants, it was held that the company was not liable for an injury to a six year old child occasioned by operation of a motor vehicle by one of his employees who, after he had refused to permit the child to ride, discovered the child had climbed onto the running-board, and negligently failed to stop the truck immediately. In that case it appears that the driver propelled the truck forward at a rate of five or six miles per hour, and had passed through some little ditches which caused the truck to tilt, and after going about 150 feet, he missed the plaintiff. It appears that the child fell off the running-board and was injured by one of the wheels of the truck. While holding that the employer, the Standard Oil Company, was not responsible by reason of the fact that there was no willful or wanton conduct, or gross negligence, the court nevertheless affirmed the judgment against the driver of the truck. There were rules in that case the same as in this, forbidding drivers to permit guests or others to ride on the truck. It may be mentioned, however, that there are no facts in the case of Newlin v. Standard Oil Company, supra, showing any willful or wanton conduct, or gross negligence. It was simply a case of ordinary negligence, and the driver was held for his failure to use ordinary care. It is true that in the case just referred to, the opinion contains more dicta to the effect that the same rule would apply in the case of willful or wanton misconduct on the part of the driver of the car, which, however, is not the law in this state.

In Zampella v. Fitzhenry, 97 N. J. Law, 517, 117 A. 711, 24 A. L. R. 666, the court of errors and appeals in New Jersey held that an employer was not liable where a fifteen year old boy had been invited to ride with the driver and was injured by falling off the running-board of the truck. It appears that while the boy was riding on the running-board, the truck struck a rut, causing the boy to fall. Here, again, there is no willful or wanton misconduct or gross negligence shown on the part of the driver of the truck. The circumstances present only a case of want of ordinary care.

In the case of Goldberg v. Borden's Condensed Milk Co., 227 N. Y. 465, 125 N. E. 807, it appears that a boy was injured by being thrown from a delivery wagon, where he was riding contrary to express orders, by the driver whipping up the horse so that the wagon was started suddenly. It was held in that case that the employer of the driver was not liable. The decision in this case was based upon the case of Rolfe v. Hewitt, 227 N. Y. 486, 125 N. E. 804, 14 A. L. R. 125, where it was held that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the submission of the cause to the jury on the ground of willful misconduct. There, the person injured was a guest of a chauffeur, and the question involved and decided was that the act of the chauffeur was outside the course of his employment. It appears from an examination of this case that only the question of negligence on the part of the chauffeur was involved, and not a question of willful or wanton misconduct or gross negligence. The facts show that the driver and the guest had gone to a certain village on an errand, had bought some materials, and on the way back, from some cause not stated, the driver lost control of the car. There is no evidence in the case showing that the car was defective in any particular, or in any hazardous or unsafe condition.

The case of Armstrong's Administrator v. Sumne & Ratterman Co., 211 Ky. 750, 278 S. W. 111, does not involve any question of willful or wanton misconduct, or gross negligence, but is simply one of ordinary negligence, and a case involving the employment of a minor under fourteen years of age, and therefore, need not be further considered.

In the case of Conner v. Citizens' Street Ry. Co., 146 Ind. 430, 45 N. E. 662, a case also cited by appellants, it was held that the company was not liable upon evidence showing that the driver, upon a signal from plaintiff who was on the car with a friend, that the friend safely alighted while the car was in motion, and that the driver then started up by striking the mules with his whip, thereby throwing the plaintiff off, is insufficient to support a charge of willful injury, in the absence of any proof that the driver knew the plaintiff was about to alight. This very statement shows that no willful or wanton conduct was involved, or even gross negligence. There was another question, however, involved and considered by the court in that case, to wit the contributory negligence of the plaintiff in attempting to alight while the car was in motion.

The case of Holwerson v. St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 157 Mo. 216, 57 S. W. 770, 50 L. R. A. 850, simply holds that contributory negligence bars recovery in the absence of willful or wanton misconduct.

In the case of Christie v. Mitchell, 93 W. Va. 200, 116 S. E. 715, a case was presented where a driver of a truck, contrary to the owner's orders, had invited children to ride on the truck. It appears that the children had been engaged in some quarrel with other children who were not allowed to ride on the truck. After the truck had started, one of the children, who was holding himself on the truck by grasping a stake thereon, loosened his hold to shake his fist at one of the children with whom he had had a quarrel, and at this instant the truck, which was moving at a speed of about six miles per hour, struck a rut, causing the boy to fall from the truck and to be injured by one of the wheels running over him. There being no showing of willful or wanton conduct on the part of the driver, the owner was held not liable. In that case a number of authorities are cited, and the court reaffirmed the rule that the master owes no duty to one who is a trespasser or a mere invitee or licensee, except not to wantonly and willfully injure him—citing a large number of authorities. The same rule is followed in the case of Carroll v. City of Yonkers, 193 App. Div. 655, 184 N. Y. S. 847, where it was further held that the city owed no duty to inspect the steering apparatus of its automobile to discover whether it had been properly lubricated, etc. The contention was that the inspection of the steering gear would have exhibited the defect mentioned. In deciding this case the court refers to the case of Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426, 31 N. E. 128, 32 Am. St. Rep. 463, and Hart v. Cole, 156 Mass. 475, 31 N. E. 644, 16 L. R. A. 557, where it is said that as to licensees, the law requires only that the licensor shall not set traps for the licensee, and shall refrain from reckless, willful, or wanton misconduct tending to injure him.

And further, that a person invited to ride, stands in the same situation as a bare licensee who enters upon real estate which a licensor is under no obligation to make safe or keep safe, but who is liable only for active negligence. Pigeon v. Lake, 80 Conn. 237, 67 A. 886, 11 Ann. Cas. 371.

In the case of Stipetich et al. v. Security Stove & Mfg. Co. (Mo.) 218 S. W. 964, a case specially called to our attention by the respondent, the court of appeals of Kansas City was dealing with an injury to a minor who was in the position of a licensee as to the driver of the truck. It appears by the facts stated in the opinion in that case that the boy killed was of the age of ten years. The boy in question was riding on the running-board of the truck, or, rather, was on the running-board of the truck when the driver started the same suddenly, throwing the boy to the ground, one of the wheels passing over him. As the court pointed out in that case, there was active misconduct on the part of the driver, which the court considered sufficient to take the case to the jury on the ground of the willfulness of the driver in starting the truck in the heedless and reckless manner referred to.

In Higbee Company v. Jackson, 101 Ohio St. 75, 128 N. E. 61, 63, 14 A. L. R. 131, the Supreme Court of Ohio had under consideration the injury to a minor child by reason of the alleged willful and wanton conduct in driving one of the defendant's delivery wagons. The facts stated in the opinion show: That the truck in question was being driven in a westerly direction on Euclid avenue, in the city of Cleveland, a much-traveled street; that the injured minor, being a boy about 14 years of age, was riding on the running-board of the truck; that while he was riding in such position, with the knowledge of the driver, the driver, propelling the truck at the rate of about 45 miles per hour, ran it from the north or right side of the street over to the center line and onto and along the left side of the street, being the wrong side of the street on which to propel the automobile, and in so doing ran against the wagon which was proceeding easterly onto the south side of the street. The boy in question was on the running-board which came in collision with the wagon. The collision resulted in serious injury to the boy. The court, in the consideration of that case, holds that if the boy was a trespasser, he was entitled to the rights of a trespasser, which would safeguard him against any willful or wanton misconduct. The court likewise in that case approves the rule, which it states in the following language: "An action to recover for an injury occasioned by negligence, the element of willfulness being absent, will not lie, unless there exists between the defendant and the person injured a relation out of which there arises a duty of the former to exercise care toward the latter." Further, in the same opinion, the court defines what it understands to be "willful and wanton conduct," as follows: "The authorities are uniform in holding that to constitute willful or wanton negligence it is not necessary to show ill will toward the person injured, but an entire absence of care for the life, person, or property of others which exhibits indifference to consequences makes a case of constructive or legal willfulness. A complete indifference to consequences distinguishes wrongs caused by wantonness and recklessness from torts arising from negligence"—citing many cases to support the rule thus stated.

In Ziehm v. Vale, 98 Ohio St. 306, 120 N. E. 702, 1 A. L. R. 1381, injury to a four year old child was involved, who had been driven off a truck belonging to the defendant, by the defendant's truck driver, who returned to the truck without noticing whether the child had again climbed onto the running-board of the truck. The court held that the starting of the truck without exercising care to see that the child was not in a perilous position constituted negligence. Neither willfulness nor wantonness were involved.

In the case of Psota v. Long Island Ry. Co., etc., 246 N. Y. 388, 159 N. E. 180, 62 A. L. R. 1163, it was held that a suit imposing liability upon the owner of an automobile for a personal injury resulting from its negligent operation in the business of such owner, or otherwise, by any person legally using the vehicle, with the owner's express or implied permission, does not extend the liability to the owner of an automobile to include acts of his employee, who, contrary to his instructions and without the scope of his employment, "invites children for a ride, who are injured when the car is struck by a train." Judgment went for the plaintiff, and was reversed as to the owner of the automobile, though affirmed as to the driver.

In the recent case of Monnet v. Ullman et al., 129 Or. 44, 276 P. 244, 247, it is held that the owner of a truck is not liable to one accepting an invitation from a truck driver, and who is injured, where there is no evidence of permission to carry passengers, the truck being used for the delivery of butter, eggs, etc., and patently not adapted or designed for the transportation of passengers. In that case the opinion points out what is and is not in the course of the employer's business. It is there said: "It is true that, if, in the course of the transaction of defendants' business, which necessarily involved driving along the highway, defendants' driver should perform that function so negligently as to run against one traveling on the road, or against such a person's vehicle, the defendants would be liable in damages, for the reason that the driver was authorized by his employer to drive upon that road, and, being so authorized, the employer assumes the burden of seeing that he drives carefully." There was testimony in that case to the following effect: "That the driver was going down a grade at about thirty miles an hour; that the rate prescribed by the city of Kalama was twelve miles an hour, and that the pavement was wet and slippery; that a wood truck was crossing the highway from the west, and according to the plaintiff's evidence, had reached about the center of the highway when the accident occurred. If this evidence indicates a wilful intent to injure plaintiff, or wanton disregard for the consequences, the writer fails to see it. Taking the plaintiff's testimony as true, the driver was going down a rather steep grade at thirty miles an hour, when the rule required him to travel at twelve miles an hour, and in this he was negligent as a matter of law. He saw the truck coming across the highway at right angles to his course, and being, perhaps, unnecessarily alarmed for fear it would cross his path, swerved to the east, and being unable, on account of his speed, to stop his truck, ran to the edge of the highway and into the grade at Elm street, where the truck upset. He had as much at stake as his passenger; was, in fact, badly injured, and in an action by his passenger against him, his disregard of the rules of the city in driving at the prohibited rate of speed, would have justified the jury in finding him guilty of ordinary negligence, and requiring him to pay damages. But as against the defendant, plaintiff was not an invitee, because the driver had no authority to invite her," etc.

[2] The excerpt which we have taken from this case concerning the course of employment of the driver of the automobile, needs no elaboration to show that Winfrid Albers was not injured by the defendant Morton while Morton was in the course of his employment. Morton was employed to drive the truck down the highway leading to the bridge where the accident occurred, to deliver gasoline and oil, and was not employed to transport either a guest, a licensee, or a trespasser.

In the case of Blood v. Austin, 149 Wash. 41, 270 P. 103, the Supreme Court of Washington held that the following facts did not constitute gross negligence toward an invited guest: The car was being driven along a graveled road, the traveled portion being about twenty feet in width. At a point 250 feet from a curve there was a caution sign. The appellant testified that the respondent started to speed up at about 100 to 200 feet from the sign, at which time his speed was estimated at 30 to 40 miles an hour, when the defendant was asked to go slow. The curve was from 75 to 100 feet in length. In rounding the curve, the car ran against a railing on the left side, which gave way, causing the car to topple over. Upon approaching the curve, and within it, it appears that the right-hand side of the road had chuck holes or ice pockets, and in taking the curve, the car was driven along the center of the highway. The roadway was frozen and covered with loose gravel or rocks, causing a lateral skidding or sliding on the pebbles of the wheels of the car to the left, until the railing was struck. It was further held that the injury was not the result of wantonness on the part of the driver.

The defect in the steering gear of the truck involved in this action is somewhat akin to defects in the braking equipment of automobiles. This defect has been considered by this court in the case of Gilmore v. Caswell, 65 Cal. App. 299, 224 P. 249, and Latky v. Wolfe, 85 Cal. App. 332, 259 P. 470, and by the Supreme Court in the case of Rocha v. Garcia, 203 Cal. 167, 263 P. 238. In all these cases, proof of such defect is held sufficient to establish the charge of negligence, and were that sufficient in this case, judgment of affirmance would follow as a matter of course.

The same ruling is had relative to defective brakes in the case of Puhr, Administrator, etc., v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 171 Wis. 154, 176 N. W. 767, 14 A. L. R. 1334. There it was held that one approaching a railroad crossing at a rather high rate of speed, knowing that the brakes of his car were defective, was guilty of a high degree of negligence. Several cases are cited in the annotations following the case just referred to, which adopt the same rule.

In Collins v. Anderson, 37 Wyo. 275, 260 P. 1089, the charge was that the defendant was driving a car with defective steering mechanism, and that he drove down a grade at 25 to 30 miles per hour, and that by reason of the defective steering gear, the defendant lost control of the car, causing it to upset. An examination of the car after the accident revealed that one of the tires had become deflated. The court held that it was a question for the jury as to whether the driver of the car was guilty of negligence.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin, in the case of O'Shea v. Lavoy, 175 Wis. 456, 185 N. W. 525, 20 A. L. R. 1008, had before it the question of negligence in driving a car equipped with defective springs, and the liability of the driver to an invited guest. Negligent operation of the automobile was not involved. The court, in the consideration of that case, used the following language: "We can see no difference between an invitation extended by a person to dine with him and an invitation extended to ride with him. It has been held by this court that in the former case the legal relation arising was that of licensor and licensee. Greenfield v. Miller, 173 Wis. 184, 180 N. W. 834, 12 A. L. R. 982. It follows that the same relation arises in the latter case, which conclusion is supported by authorities already cited. Whether or not the established rules of liability existing between licensor and licensee are applicable in the manner of the management of the automobile, they plainly are applicable so far as the condition of the automobile is concerned. According to those rules, the guest accepts the premises of his host as he finds them, subject only to the limitation that the licensor must not set a trap or be guilty of active negligence which contributed to the injury. Here, the accident happened, as said before, because of a broken spring, and the question was, did that constitute a trap within the meaning of the rule? That is the only basis upon which liability could be predicated. A trap, within the meaning of this rule as we understand it, is a hidden danger lurking upon the premises which may be avoided if known. Hence, it is the duty of the host to advise his guest of its presence so that the guest may enjoy the premises in a security equal to that enjoyed by the host. The guest has no right to a greater security than that enjoyed by the host or other members of the family. The host simply places the premises which he has to offer, at the disposal and enjoyment of his guest, upon equal terms of security. In this case the defendant considered the automobile to be in sufficient condition to make the trip. This is evidenced by the fact that he not only entrusted his own safety thereto, but that of his wife and children as well. There can be no stronger evidence of the belief of the ordinary well-meaning man in the sufficiency of the car to safely make the trip." It was further held that the circumstances detailed did not constitute gross negligence, and in the state of Wisconsin, the owner and driver of a car is not liable to guests for ordinary negligence, but only for gross negligence.

The same court, in the case of Olson v. Hermansen, 196 Wis. 614, 220 N. W. 203, 61 A. L. R. 1243, held that a host owes to his guest in an automobile, the duty to exercise ordinary care not to increase the danger to the guest, or to create any new danger.

In Marple v. Haddad, 103 W. Va. 508, 138 S. E. 113, 115, 61 A. L. R. 1248, the Supreme Court of West Virginia holds that one who is carried gratuitously in an automobile, at his own request, takes the machine as he finds it, subject to the duty of the operator to warn such licensee of any known dangerous defect in the vehicle. In that case, we find the following language: "Reasonable care for the safety of young Marple commenced only when he entered the truck. The defendant owed him no duty of prior inspection. 'He who enters an automobile to take a ride with the owner also takes the automobile and the driver as he finds them.' * * * 'A guest, upon premises or in the vehicle of another, must take such premises or vehicle as he finds them' (subject to the exception that it is the duty of the owner to warn the guest of any 'trap' known to the owner)"—citing the case which we have heretofore mentioned of Carroll v. Yonkers, holding that a city is not required to inspect cars to ascertain defects as against a mere licensee.

In the case of Puckett v. Pailthorpe, 223 N. W. 254, the Supreme Court of Iowa held that a charge of negligence, predicated upon one of the car doors being loose, and failing to advise a guest, by reason of which the invited guest was injured, was sufficiently established.

In Harber v. Graham, 143 A. 340, 342, 61 A. L. R. 1232, the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey, in a case involving gross negligence, held that poor judgment might amount to gross negligence, but would not constitute either willfulness or wantonness. In that case the court further said: "Can it be that gross negligence contains any underlying element differentiating it in this respect from ordinary negligence? [That is, the exercise of judgment.] We think not. Both fall short of willfulness, either actual or constructive, and as is pointed out in the Massachusetts case above quoted, differ from each other in degree only rather than in quality. That this must be so we think is demonstrated by the fact that: 'The later American cases, with practical unanimity, reject the doctrine that negligence is capable of division into the different degrees of slight, ordinary, gross.'" The court then points out that certain cases make only the distinction between the negligence and what is called "willful" negligence. The court further held that the facts detailed in that case establish gross negligence.

In Mitchell v. Raymond, 181 Wis. 591, 195 N. W. 855, 858, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin again reaffirmed its former holdings as to a guest accepting the premises just as they are found. It is there said: "By the present holding there is no intention to limit or withdraw anything that has been said heretofore in such cases as Greenfield v. Miller, 173 Wis. 184, 180 N. W. 834, 12 A. L. R. 982, and O'Shea v. Lavozy, 175 Wis. 456, 185 N. W. 525, 20 A. L. R. 1008, or, to qualify the rule thereby recognized, namely, that the guest who comes upon the premises or enters into the vehicle of another must take such premises or vehicle as he finds them and as it pleases the owner, in the exercise of his right of dominion over his own property to maintain the same, provided, of course, such owner does not fail in the duty of informing or warning the guest of that which must be considered a trap or concealed defect or by no act of his creates a new danger." The facts in that case were held only to establish ordinary negligence, and therefore, insufficient to create liability on the part of the defendant.

[3] It will be observed that in all of the foregoing cases relative to the condition of the automobile, the injured party was either a licensee or an invited guest, and not a trespasser, and even under such circumstances, liability was not established by any of the alleged defects, as they were not held sufficient to constitute gross negligence. It is also true that in the cases cited, and in the legion of cases referred to in the annotations found in the different volumes of American Law Reports to which we have referred, a very large percentage involve injuries to minors. In the case at bar, while the deceased was under the age of 21 years, he was in no sense a minor incapable of judging of the situation, and was in all respects in the same class with ordinary trespassers. He was warned that it was against the rules of the company to ride on the truck, and he had immediately facing him, while seated upon the uncushioned portion of the seat on the truck, a notice that employees only were entitled to ride there.

[4] In this state, negligence is now recognized as consisting of three classes, slight, ordinary, and gross, all of which are distinguishable from either wantonness or willfulness. Correctly speaking, wantonness and willfulness are not negligence at all. They indicate a reckless conduct which has gone beyond negligence constituting either of the three degrees, though in many of the cases, loose language appears, showing that the distinctions here mentioned have been lost to sight.

In 45 C. J. 674, § 38, we find the following: "When the terms are accurately used, there is a clear distinction between negligence and wantonness, in that mere carelessness or inadvertence may constitute negligence, whereas wantonness includes the elements of consciousness of one's conduct, intent to do or omit the act in question, realization of the probable injury to another, and reckless disregard of consequences. Accordingly, it has been said that wantonness and negligence are incompatible. Nevertheless, the term 'wanton negligence' is frequently used by the courts in expressing something more than ordinary negligence." Again, in the following section it is said: "That willfulness and wantonness express different ideas and are clearly distinguishable, in that willfulness includes the element of actual intent to inflict injuries, while in the case of wantonness, there is no such actual intent, but at most, an implied or constructive intent." In the same volume, on page 745, appears the following rule as to trespassers: "There is no duty to provide for the presence of trespassers, but a trespasser enters at his own risk, takes the property on which he enters, as he finds it. Therefore, the owner or person in charge of property owes to a mere trespasser thereon, no duty to keep the property in a suitable or safe condition, and is not under any obligations to remove hidden dangers, or to warn trespassers of their existence." This rule, of course, is subject to the exception heretofore noted as to traps.

In Tognazzini v. Freeman, 18 Cal. App. 468, 123 P. 540, 543, we find the following relative to negligence: "By 'negligence' is meant ordinary negligence—a term the significance of which is reasonably well fixed. By gross negligence is meant exceeding negligence—that which is mere inadvertence in a superlative degree. * * * By 'willful negligence' is meant not strictly negligence at all, to speak exactly, since negligence implies inadvertence, and whenever there is an exercise of will in a particular direction there is an end of inadvertence, but rather an intentional failure to perform a manifest duty, which is important to the person injured, in preventing the injury in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another. Such conduct is not negligence in any proper sense, and the term 'willful negligence,' if these words are to be interpreted with scientific accuracy, is a misnomer."

In Crosman v. S. P. Co., 44 Nev. 286, 194 P. 839, the Supreme Court of Nevada had occasion to consider the question of the alleged wanton and willful negligence of a switching crew in backing an engine without a rear light, whereby the plaintiff was injured while riding on a handcar being propelled on a double track against the course of traffic. In that case the distinction is drawn between "negligence," "willfulness" and "wantonness," substantially as herein stated.

In 19 California Jurisprudence, 555, considering the subject of willful and wanton injury, the text-writer uses language somewhat less exact. It is there said: "It has been stated that there may be negligence and wantonness at the same time. Carelessness does not imply wantonness, but as wantonness may exist with intent to injure, it may imply carelessness. To do an act in reckless disregard of consequences, though not intending to do an injury, is to do the act in a careless and negligent manner, and it would, under some circumstances, be wantonly done."

[5, 6] There is nothing in this case which indicates that the defendant Morton, as the driver of the truck belonging to the defendant Shell Company, in any degree apprehended that he was driving a truck attendant with any unusual dangers. That there are dangers inherent in automobile traffic is beyond question. The staggering array of damage suits found in the books is sufficient corroboration of this statement. No other instrumentality has so appealed to the fancy of the American public, or so revolutionized the habits and customs of the people, but its adoption and use has been coincident with fatalities mounting into the tens of thousands, and it may be truthfully said that everyone who starts upon an automobile ride, to some degree at least takes not only his personal security, but his life as well in his hands. However, these considerations are not sufficient to support verdicts in damage cases. All of the facts which we have considered were practically before the court upon the conclusion of the plaintiff's case, and the motion of the defendants for a nonsuit should have been granted. If the question of negligence only were involved in this case, we would be inclined to the view that the facts appearing in the record are sufficient to send the case to the jury, but as it manifestly fails to show any willful or wanton act or omission on the part of the driver Morton, there is nothing in the case to support the verdict. The jury might be warranted in finding that the sending of the truck out on the highway with the nut missing from the top of the steering post, constituted negligence, but the evidence shows clearly that the deceased was a trespasser. We do not see how it can be found that the absence of the nut constituted anything which comes within the definition of a trap, and as the appellants could be found liable in damages only for some willful or wanton misconduct, a verdict and judgment without the presence of one or the other of these elements cannot be sustained in this case. A "trap" is a term used to designate any very dangerous construction or condition designedly arranged to do injury. Moffatt v. Kenny, 174 Mass. 311, 54 N. E. 850; 38 Cyc. 948.

While a jury might reasonably infer from the testimony in this case that the jar occasioned to the steering wheel by the driving of the truck upon the highway, would tend to disengage the steering wheel from the steering post, the fact that the steering wheel could not be lifted from the steering post without the use of a hammer to tap the wheel on the underside the number of times mentioned, enforces the conclusion that the driver was not acting either willfully or wantonly, but might assume that the steering mechanism was reasonably safe for the uses and purposes for which the truck was intended.

By reason of what we have said, other alleged grounds for reversal need not be considered.

The judgment is reversed.

105 Cal. App. 28

McVEA v. NICKOLS.

Civ. 123.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 1, 1930.

1. Automobiles ⇨245(72) — Injury to pedestrian — Contributory negligence — Question for jury.

Contributory negligence of pedestrian struck by automobile while crossing street held for jury.

2. Automobiles ⇨216 — Injury to pedestrian — Public highway — Reasonable care.

Pedestrian has same right on public highway as driver of automobile, subject to exercise of right with reasonable amount of care, under existing circumstances.

3. Negligence ⇨136(26) — Contributory negligence — Precaution for safety — Question of law.

Contributory negligence is usually question of law, where injured party takes absolutely no precautions for his own safety.

4. Trial ⇨143 — Conflicting evidence — Inferences — Question for jury.

Conflicting evidence, together with possible inferences therefrom, presents question of fact for jury.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1060(1) — Injuries to pedestrian — Examination of juror — Automobile insurance — Prejudice.

Questioning prospective juror, in pedestrian's action for injuries sustained when struck by automobile, relative to interest in automobile insurance company held not prejudicial.

6. Automobiles ⇨246(56) — Injuries to pedestrian — Instruction — Speed — Grade crossing — Obstructed view.

Evidence in pedestrian's action for injuries sustained when struck by automobile warranted instruction as to law on speed over grade crossing when view is obstructed.

7. Automobiles ⇨246(56) — Injury to pedestrian — Instructions — Restrictions on speed.

Instruction on restrictions as to speed, in pedestrian's action for injuries when struck by automobile, held not erroneous under evidence.

The instruction was to the effect that any person driving vehicle on public highway should drive the same at a careful and prudent speed not greater than was reasonable and proper, having due regard to traffic, surface, and length of highway, and that no person should drive any vehicle at such a speed as to endanger life, limb, or property of any person.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; William D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by Andy McVea against A. W. Nickols. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Harvey & Heard, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

M. G. Brittan, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

BARNARD, J.

In this action the plaintiff recovered a verdict against the defendant for $3,500, on account of injuries sustained through being struck and knocked down by an automobile operated by defendant. Upon the hearing of the usual motion, the court ordered a new trial unless the plaintiff remitted one-half of the amount of the verdict. The plaintiff consented, and thereupon the motion for new trial was denied. The defendant has appealed from the judgment based upon the verdict, as thus altered.

It appears from the evidence that about 8 o'clock on the evening of January 15, 1928, the defendant was driving an automobile through the city of Bakersfield. He was traveling north on Chester avenue. This street crosses a railroad, with several tracks, at a point where there is no street intersection. Chester avenue is paved from curb to curb, to the south of the railroad crossing, with a sidewalk on the east side thereof. The railroad crossing itself is paved, but with no sidewalk. From the railroad crossing, the state highway extends north on Chester avenue, paved in the center, with an unpaved portion on each side. Just prior to the accident, the plaintiff was proceeding north on the easterly sidewalk of Chester avenue. Upon reaching the intersection of Chester avenue with the railroad, the plaintiff looked up and down the tracks, looked south on Chester avenue, and, seeing no automobile, proceeded across the railroad tracks. There is a conflict in the evidence as to whether he was simply crossing the tracks, going north, or as to whether he was not only crossing the tracks but proceeding along them in a westerly direction, toward the west side of the street. It is not contradicted that while on the railroad tracks, where the street is paved, and where there is no sidewalk, he was struck by the automobile driven by the defendant, and thrown from twenty-five to thirty-five feet. When the car stopped, the plaintiff was under the car, and the car was on the unpaved portion of the road, north of the railroad tracks and east of the paved highway.

[1] The defendant testified that he did not see the plaintiff until he was within five or six feet of him; that his car was going in a straight line toward the plaintiff; and that he had no memory of turning or swerving his car. He testified at one time that he was proceeding along the center of Chester avenue, and at another time that he was to the right of the center but close to a street car track. How close he was to the street car track does not appear. The record shows that a machine going straight north in the center of the street, after crossing the railroad tracks, would be upon the paved portion of the highway, but that a machine proceeding nearer the right-hand side of the street would, at the time of crossing the railroad tracks, have to swerve to the left to be upon the paved portion of the highway. It does not appear from the evidence just how far to the east of the center of Chester avenue a car would have to be in order to make necessary a swerve to the left, in order to be upon the paved portion of the highway after crossing the railroad tracks. There was evidence that the usual custom of cars traveling north on this street is to swerve to the left or toward the west, because of the narrowing of the paved or traveled portion of the highway north from the railroad tracks. Defendant was familiar with the street in question, which is the main street for automobiles coming in or going out of Bakersfield. It was stipulated that the point where the accident occurred was not in the business section, and there was introduced in evidence an ordinance of the city of Bakersfield, containing the following: "Outside of business district, no pedestrian shall cross a roadway other than by a route at right angles to the curb, and when crossing at any place other than a cross-walk, shall yield the right-of-way to all vehicles upon the roadway."

Appellant contends that the failure of the plaintiff to look more carefully before proceeding across or along the tracks, and his failure to give the right-of-way to defendant's machine, as required by the ordinance mentioned, constitute contributory negligence, as a matter of law. The entire question of contributory negligence of the plaintiff was submitted to the jury upon appropriate instructions. Under the circumstances shown here, we think the issue as to contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff was a question of fact, and properly left to the jury.

In Moss v. Boynton Co., 44 Cal. App. 474, 186 P. 631, 632, the rule is laid down as follows:

"Contributory negligence 'is a question of law only when the evidence is of such a character that it will support no other legitimate inference than that in the one case the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. * * * When the evidence is such that the court is impelled to say that it is not in conflict on the facts, and that from those facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his own injury, then, and only then, does the law step in and forbid plaintiff a recovery. * * * Even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one of fact for the jury.' Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 240, 116 P. 513; Wing v. Western Pac. Co., 41 Cal. App. 251, 182 P. 969."

[2-4] In the instant case, there is a conflict in the evidence on a number of important points. There is evidence to indicate the plaintiff was struck after he had reached a point on the railroad tracks, which is west of the east line of the paved portion of the highway, which extends north from the tracks. There is other evidence which indicates he was struck at a point to the east of that line. There is evidence indicating that the plaintiff was attempting, not only to cross the railroad tracks, but to cross Chester avenue along the line of the railroad tracks. There is other evidence which indicates that the plaintiff was crossing the tracks and proceeding on his way north, and the inference is possible that he intended following the east line of the paved portion of said highway, north of the tracks, and also that there was no side-walk north of the railroad tracks. A pedestrian has the same right to travel upon a public highway as has the driver of an automobile, subject to the exercise of this right with a reasonable amount of care, under the circumstances then existing. Hatzakorjian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A. L. R. 1027. In considering both the conflicting evidence and the inferences most favorable to the plaintiff, which may legitimately be drawn, it cannot be said that a reasonable mind must conclude that the plaintiff was negligent. Where an injured party takes absolutely no precautions for his own safety, the question of contributory negligence is usually one of law. Where, however, he takes some precautions, but for some reason fails to see an approaching automobile, or misjudges its speed or distance, or for some other reason assumes he may avoid injury to himself, the question is usually one of fact for the jury. The evidence here is uncontradicted that the plaintiff looked before starting to cross the tracks, and, having taken some precautions, his case would fall within the usual rule. In addition, there is a conflict in the evidence and in the possible inferences therefrom, and the question was therefore one of fact for the jury.

[5] Appellant's second objection relates to a question asked of a prospective juror. The question is as follows: "Mr. Premo, are you a stockholder or interested in the Union Automobile Insurance Company?" The principal argument made is that to permit such a question, with what is claimed to be its inevitable effect upon the jury, is prejudicial per se to the defendant. In Eldridge v. Clark & Henry Construction Co., 75 Cal. App. at page 532, 243 P. 43, 50, the court says:

"No case has been cited—indeed none can be found—which goes to the extent of holding that, where such an examination by plaintiff is allowed, it is prejudicial per se. To the contrary, many cases hold that there are certain circumstances under which such an examination may properly be allowed and all the cases hold that, where the allowance of that line of examination, either of jurors on their voir dire or of witnesses, involves error, the question whether it is or is not to be deemed to be of sufficient gravity, in its effect upon the rights of the defendant, to require a reversal, is dependent entirely upon the circumstances of each particular case."

In the case of Cozad v. Raisch Improvement Co., 175 Cal. at page 624, 166 P. 1000, 1002, the Supreme Court uses the following language:

"We know of no rule of law which would require a reversal for referring to the real party defendant of an action under such circumstances, while the propriety of eliciting information touching a juror's or witness' personal interest in favor of such interested indemnity company is, where the right is exercised within the sound discretion of the court not to be questioned on appeal."

While this language is used in discussing a different phase of the matter of prejudice ascribed to questions that may convey to the jury an idea of the presence of an insurance company in the background, it seems to be such an expression on the point raised as we are not at liberty to disregard. See, also, the following cases: Arnold v. California Portland Cement Co., 41 Cal. App. 420, 183 P. 171; Baldarachi v. Leach, 44 Cal. App. 603, 186 P. 1060; Williamson v. Hardy, 47 Cal. App. 377, 190 P. 646; Murphy v. Shaffer, 58 Cal. App. 453, 208 P. 1003; Girard v. Irvine (Cal. App.) 275 P. 850; Daniel v. Asbill (Cal. App.) 276 P. 149.

Appellant concedes that the decisions are against his contention, but urges that we change the law, on account of the impossibility of proving that such questions are not asked in good faith, and because of the more or less obvious dangers that are inherent in permitting such an impression or suggestion to reach the jury. While we have some sympathy with appellant's point of view, we feel that the rule has been sufficiently established to require that any change, or consideration thereof should come from the Supreme Court.

It is further urged that the fact that the verdict in this case was reduced by the trial court, as a condition of denying a motion for a new trial, shows that the question to which objection is made resulted in prejudice to the defendant. Not only was the question so worded as to be within the rights of respondent under the decisions, but any excess in the verdict has been taken care of by the action of the trial court. In view of the evidence in the record, as to the injuries sustained by the plaintiff, the present verdict cannot be held to be excessive.

[6, 7] It is next contended that the court erred in giving the following instruction to the jury:

"Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I instruct you that the law of the State of California declares as follows: '113. Restrictions as to speed. (a) Any person driving a vehicle on the public highways of this state shall drive the same at a careful and prudent speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway, and no person shall drive any vehicle upon a public highway at such a speed as to endanger the life, limb or property of any person.'

"1. Fifteen miles an hour in traversing a grade crossing of any steam, electric or street railway when the driver's view is obstructed. A driver's view shall be deemed to be obstructed when at any time during the last 100 feet of his approach to such crossing he does not have a clear and uninterrupted view of such railway crossing and of any traffic on such railway for a distance of 400 feet in both directions from such crossing.'"

Objection is made to this instruction, both upon the ground that there is no evidence of any obstruction to the extent specified in that portion of the California Vehicle Act quoted in the instruction, and upon the second ground that there is no evidence showing that defendant's rate of speed in any manner contributed to the accident. As to the first ground of objection, there was evidence that to the south of the railroad tracks, and to the west of Chester avenue, there was a building, store, service station and a lot of little cabins, and to the south of the tracks, on the easterly side, there was a big garage and big building where oil was stored, and that the block was practically filled. One witness testified that the view from the east side of Chester avenue, looking up the railroad tracks, was blocked. Appellant insists that there is no evidence that the view was blocked for a distance of 400 feet. A part of the testimony having been given with reference to a map or diagram not in the record, it is not possible to review its weight. But to come within the terms of the law it is not necessary that the view be blocked for 400 feet, but that the same be blocked at any point within said distance. While there is conflicting evidence on the point, there is sufficient evidence in the record to warrant instructing the jury as to the law in reference to an obstructed view at such a point. There was also conflicting evidence as to the speed of defendant's car, and as to the point in the street where the plaintiff was struck. Perhaps the principal question in the case was as to the position of defendant's car in reference to the center of the street, and whether he should have swerved to the left to keep on the paved portion of the highway north of the railroad tracks. Defendant's speed may have had a material relation to his seeing the plaintiff in time, and to whether or not he should have seen the necessity for, and have made, a swerve to the left to keep on the highway. Not only was the question of defendant's speed material as to the original responsibility for the accident, but it was also material with reference to the extent of the injury, in view of the uncontradicted evidence that the plaintiff was dragged 25 to 35 feet. In view of the conflicting evidence, the court was not in error in giving the instruction.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

WILLIAMSON v. MOORE et al.
Civ. 303.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 29, 1930.

Justices of the peace §42 — Jurisdiction — Population of township — Action on note.

Justice of peace in township of Riverside, which was found to have population exceeding 30,000, held to have jurisdiction of action based on note for $500, with interest, and $100 attorney's fees. (Code Civ. Proc. § 112).

Application by R. H. Williamson for writ of mandamus prayed to be directed to the Justice Court of Riverside Township, Riverside County, and L. J. Difani, as Justice of the Peace, to compel respondents to exercise original jurisdiction in action in which petitioner is plaintiff. R. A. Moore was substituted in place of L. J. Difani, as Justice of the Peace.

Peremptory writ issued.

Best & Best and J. L. Granttham, all of Riverside, for petitioner.

R. A. Moore, of Riverside, for respondents.

BARNARD, J.

The petitioner herein filed an action, as plaintiff, in the respondent justice's court, on September 3, 1929, demanding judgment for $500, with interest at 8 per cent. from March 1, 1928, for $100 attorney's fees, and costs of suit. Said suit was based upon a promissory note made payable in said township. A summons was issued and served and the defendants defaulted. On October 18, 1929, petitioner, as such plaintiff in said action, appeared before L. J. Difani, as such justice of the peace, offered to make proof of the service of summons, and demanded the entry of judgment in his favor. Following the refusal of said justice of the peace to enter said judgment, or to accept jurisdiction in such action, this proceeding was begun by the filing of an appropriate petition. Petitioner alleges that at all times since September 1, 1929, said township of Riverside has had a population in excess of 30,000 inhabitants. Petitioner seeks a peremptory writ of mandate, directing and commanding respondent to forthwith hear the proof of petitioner, and, if such proof be found sufficient to enter judgment in favor of petitioner, and commanding the respondent to accept and exercise jurisdiction over said action. Proof having been made that the said L. J. Difani had, after the beginning of this proceeding, resigned as such justice of the peace, and that R. A. Moore is now the duly appointed, qualified, and acting justice of the peace in the said township, after due proceedings had, an order was made by this court substituting the said R. A. Moore in the place and stead of the said L. J. Difani, as respondent justice of the peace in this proceeding. An answer was filed by the respondents admitting all of the allegations of the petition, except that it is denied that said township has a population in excess of 30,000 inhabitants, or that it has had such a population at any time since September 1, 1929.

Upon stipulation of the parties, Earl W. Porter was appointed by this court as referee, to take evidence and determine the facts in regard to the population of said township, and report his findings to this court. His report and findings were filed herein on March 14, 1930, in which he found that the population of the township of Riverside, county of Riverside, state of California, was, on March 1, 1930, in excess of 30,000, and that at all times since August 1, 1929, the population of said township has been, and now is, in excess of 30,000. Said report and findings are accompanied by a statement of the evidence upon which they are based. All parties concerned have stipulated that the findings of said referee are correct, and that they may be adopted as the findings of this court. In accordance with such report and such findings, and upon the evidence submitted by the referee, in support thereof, this court now finds as a fact that the township of Riverside, county of Riverside, state of California, had, on March 1, 1930, a population in excess of 30,000, and that said township has had at all times since September 1, 1929, a population in excess of 30,000.

Under authority of the case of County of Los Angeles v. Justice's Court of Beverly Hills Township et al. (Cal. Sup.) 281 P. 611, we hold that the respondent justice's court of the said township of Riverside, and the respondent justice of the peace thereof, must take jurisdiction of all matters coming within the jurisdiction prescribed by section 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure. And, although the same is not involved in this proceeding, since the population of said township is hereby found to be in excess of 30,000, it should also be stated that it is the duty of the respondent justice's court and the respondent justice of the peace thereof to accept, and exercise as well, the jurisdiction conferred by section 1425 of the Penal Code of this state.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue, directed to and commanding the respondent the justice's court of the township of Riverside, Riverside county, Cal., and R. A. Moore, as justice of the peace of said township, to forthwith accept and exercise jurisdiction over the matter herein referred to, and to proceed to hear and determine such matter in accordance with the law.

We concur: MARKS, Acting P. J.; BEAUMONT, Justice pro tem.

PEOPLE v. GOMEZ et al. ★
Cr. 3283.

Supreme Court of California.

April 9, 1930.

Rehearing Denied May 8, 1930.

1. Homicide §253(1) — Conviction — Sufficiency of evidence.

Evidence held to sustain conviction for first degree murder (Pen. Code, § 189).

2. Homicide §29 — Guilt.

Which of defendants conspiring to kill deceased wielded hammer striking him held immaterial; each being equally guilty.

3. Jury §131(8) — Examination on voir dire — Attitude regarding death penalty.

Both people and defense in first degree murder case may test on voir dire attitude of jurors regarding death penalty.

4. Jury §131(8) — Voir dire — Death penalty — Attitude — Punishment for jury.

Permitting prosecuting officer, in murder prosecution, to question jurors on voir dire concerning attitude regarding death penalty, held not error, where question of punishment was committed exclusively to jurors.

The court took an active part in the examination of jurors on the voir dire, and stated that, in first degree murder case, question of penalty is committed exclusively to conscience and judgment of jurors, and that, if verdict be brought in finding defendant guilty of murder of first degree, and nothing is said about penalty, it becomes duty of court to impose extreme penalty, but that jury may mitigate punishment. In general charge to jury, the court stated punishment for murder of first degree is death or confinement in state prison for life, at discretion of jury trying case.

5. Criminal law §438 — Photograph of deceased — Admissibility.

Photograph of deceased showing incision marks made for autopsy and indicated by surgeon held admissible in murder prosecution, where it was not claimed photograph did not otherwise show condition of deceased after murder.

6. Criminal law §655(1) — Court — Reference to death penalty — Error.

Court's reference in murder prosecution to death penalty as extreme penalty held not error.

7. Criminal law §726 — District attorney's comments — Life imprisonment — Sentence — Misconduct.

District attorney's comments in murder prosecution on effect of life imprisonment sentence provoked by defense argument that it was greater than death penalty held not misconduct.

SHENK, J.

John Gomez and George Ryley were charged by indictment in the county of Alameda with the murder of George Jones. They were tried together, the jury returned verdicts of guilty as charged, without recommendation, and judgments of death were pronounced against them. Appeals from the judgments of conviction and from the orders denying their motions for a new trial are prosecuted on one record.

[1] No point is made that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdicts of murder of the first degree. Indeed, no other conclusion would have been warranted under the evidence. Section 189, Pen. Code. The defendants were young men who had lived at or in the vicinity of Livermore and had known each other for many years. The deceased, at the time of the murder, was a man about seventy years of age. He was the proprietor of a taxicab service, which had its headquarters in a pool hall, also conducted by the deceased. The defendants had known him also for several years.

Prior to the night of May 18, 1929, the defendants deliberately conspired to rob the deceased, "Dad" Jones, as he was familiarly known. In concert they conceived the plan of luring the deceased, by a false telephone call in the nighttime, to a point outside of Livermore, knock him unconscious with a gas pipe, rob him of the cash on his person, and return to the pool hall, there to loot the place before the deceased could recover consciousness and return to his place of business. They consummated their purpose on the night of May 18. The deceased was by telephone requested to perform taxicab service at Olivina Gates, a spot some two or three miles from Livermore, and he responded to the call. Failing conveniently to find a gas pipe, the defendants acquired a hammer with which to assist them in perpetrating the crime. When the deceased arrived at the place appointed, one of the defendants struck the deceased in the head with the hammer, immediately depriving him of consciousness, which he never regained. There was no evidence of resistance on the part of the deceased. The autopsy disclosed that the skull had been fractured by a blunt instrument in several places. In some places the skull bone had been driven into the brain tissue as much as two inches. The jaw was also fractured, and the scalp and face were otherwise contused. The defendants divided equally between themselves the $23.20 in cash found upon the person of the deceased and threw away his wallet, which contained checks.

[2] After their apprehension, each of the defendants admitted the commission of the crime charged, but each sought to relieve himself of its atrocity by contending that the other had wielded the hammer. Under the circumstances, it was immaterial which struck the death blow, for each is equally guilty of the crime. People v. Kauffman, 152 Cal. 331, 92 P. 861.

As grounds for the appeal, it is contended that the court committed error in permitting the prosecuting officer to inquire of the jurors on voir dire as to their state of mind respecting the death penalty, particularly whether they would have any hesitancy in bringing in a verdict carrying the death penalty, if there was no proof of extenuating circumstances and the punishment should be mitigated. The court took an active part in the examination of the prospective jurors, correctly stating in connection with the examination of Claude S. Thomas, who subsequently served as a juror, that in a first degree murder case the question of the penalty "is committed exclusively to the conscience and judgment of the jurors; that if a verdict be brought in finding the defendant guilty of murder of the first degree and nothing is said about the penalty it becomes the duty of the court to impose the extreme penalty and hang him. But the jury is clothed with exclusive judgment and discretion in all these cases of murder of the first degree, of mitigating the punishment, and they may, if they desire to mitigate the punishment and make it life imprisonment, bring in a verdict which finds the defendant guilty of murder of the first degree and fix the punishment at imprisonment in state prison for life."

In the general charge to the jury the court again correctly stated the law as follows: "The punishment for murder of the first degree is death or confinement in the state prison for life, at the discretion of the jury trying the case. The law prescribes no rules or tests for the guidance of jurors in the exercise of its discretion in determining whether the greater or lesser penalty shall be inflicted, but leaves the question of punishment solely to the judgment and conscience of the jury."

[3, 4] Both the people and the defense in a first degree murder case have the right to test on voir dire the attitude of a prospective juror regarding the infliction of the death penalty. But there is no place in such examination for the intimation or suggestion that the question of the punishment in such a case is not one solely within the discretion of the jury. The record herein discloses that the trial court was fully aware of the criticism and strictures placed by this court upon the instructions in the cases of People v. Bollinger, 196 Cal. 191, 237 P. 25, and People v. Arnold, 199 Cal. 471, 250 P. 168. We find no error in the rulings of the court in connection with the voir dire.

[5] Objection is made to the introduction in evidence of a photograph of the deceased taken after the autopsy had been performed. This photograph showed marks of the incisions made for the purposes of the autopsy. It is contended that the abhorrence of the jurors was thereby prejudicially aroused. But the autopsy surgeon pointed out to the jury the marks resulting from his examination, and it is not claimed that the exhibit otherwise did not correctly depict the condition of the deceased after the murder. There is no merit in the contention.

[6, 7] It is further contended that the court misconstrued the law in referring to the death penalty as the "extreme" penalty, and that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in commenting upon the effect in this state of a sentence of life imprisonment. The death penalty has been denominated the "extreme penalty" on numerous occasions by this court, and it is so generally considered. The argument is that life imprisonment would be greater punishment than death in this case because of the youth of the defendants. It may fairly be assumed, as urged by counsel for the people, that this same argument was presented to the jury by defendants' counsel. The correctness of this assumption is not denied by counsel for the defense. The argument of the latter is, under the practice, not printed in the transcript. It therefore seems entirely probable that the remarks of the district attorney as to the effect of a sentence of life imprisonment in this state was provoked by the argument to the jury on behalf of the defendants. Furthermore, no objection to the remarks of the district attorney was interposed at the time they were made.

We find no error in the court's instructions to the jury nor in the refusal to give certain other requested instructions. The defendants were fairly tried for the offense of which they were charged, and, notwithstanding the very earnest presentation of their cause on appeal, we find no ground for reversal.

The judgments and orders are, and each is, affirmed.

Supreme Court of California.

April 1, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 28, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨930(1) — Presumptions — Conflicting evidence.

Conflict in evidence must be determined in favor of respondent on appeal.

2. Fraudulent conveyances ⇨298(1), 300(1) — Trust deed — Consideration — Fraudulent purpose — Evidence.

Evidence held to establish that trust deed was supported by consideration and executed without intent to defraud creditors.

3. Corporations ⇨1 — Separate entity — Evidence.

Evidence that trust deed beneficiary owned over half of stock of debtor held insufficient to permit court to disregard fiction of separate corporate existence.

4. Corporations ⇨1 — Separate entity — Evidence.

To warrant disregard of corporate entity, it must appear that corporation is alter ego of its stockholders, and that to recognize separate entity would consummate wrong.

5. Corporations ⇨426(10) — Manager's authority — Estoppel of corporation to deny.

Corporation receiving money with knowledge of manager's promise to execute trust deed held estopped to deny manager's authority, even if authority given by directors' resolution was ineffective (Civ. Code, §§ 320, 320a, 2309, 1624, subd. 5).

The trust deed was claimed invalid because resolution authorizing its execution was not duly passed at duly assembled meeting of board of directors of corporation, since one of its directors was absent and not duly notified of special meeting, as required by Civ. Code, § 320, and director in no way waived notice as required by section 320a. It appeared that the director had not given his place of residence or his business address to secretary of corporation and that he had disappeared.

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; James O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by the Wood Estate Company against Flora Lee Chanslor, Thomas Allen Chanslor, and others. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the named defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

F. H. Dam, of San Francisco, for appellants.

L. H. Hughes, of Quincy, and Thomas P. Boyd, of San Rafael, for respondent Wood Estate Co.

William B. Crocker, of San Anselmo, for respondent Plumas Grass Valley Mines Co.

H. W. B. Taylor, of San Anselmo, for respondent Redwood Highlands Co.

WASTE, C. J.

The defendants have prosecuted this appeal from a judgment quieting the plaintiff's title to certain mining property situate in the county of Plumas. Plaintiff and defendants claim title from the same source, to wit, from the Plumas Grass Valley Mines Company, hereinafter referred to as the Mining Company. Plaintiff-respondent derived its title by virtue of a sale and conveyance under a trust deed executed by the mining company. Defendants-appellants claim title by virtue of a sale to them on an execution issued on a money judgment recovered by them against the mining company in an action for damages for personal injuries. The facts show that the trust deed through which the respondent derails title was delivered by the mining company to the respondent the Wood Estate Company, together with a contemporaneous chattel mortgage, to secure a prior indebtedness of the mining company to the Wood Estate Company and its predecessors in the sum of $39,500, evidenced by a promissory note in that sum. The promissory note was executed and delivered at the same time the trust deed and chattel mortgage were delivered, under circumstances hereinafter pointed out. The trust deed, chattel mortgage, and promissory note above mentioned antedated by two days the judgment executed upon by appellants, and upon which their title depends, although the action in which said judgment was entered had been commenced seven months prior thereto. Recordation of the trust deed and chattel mortgage occurred after rendition and entry of appellants' judgment, but while execution thereon was being stayed at the instance of the judgment debtor, the mining company. The appellants had not recorded an abstract of the judgment at the time the trust deed was recorded, and had not, therefore, acquired a prior lien under section 674 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This trust deed and chattel mortgage running to respondent, the Wood Estate Company, served to charge all of the property of the mining company with the payment of the indebtedness owing to respondent.

From the above facts it appears that both in point of time of execution and time of recordation the lien upon which respondent relies antedated the lien of appellants. Appellants contend that the lien upon which they rely is entitled to priority, and that therefore the judgment quieting title in respondent should be reversed. Appellants attack the judgment on three main grounds, to wit:

(1) That the trust deed through which the respondent received title was executed and delivered without any consideration therefor having passed to the mining company, and was executed and delivered with the fraudulent intent and purpose of precluding the appellants from realizing on any judgment they might thereafter procure in their action for personal injuries then pending against the mining company.

(2) That this court should disregard the fiction of the distinct corporate existence of the mining company, and treat the acts complained of as the acts of the Wood Estate Company, on the theory that the mining company was "in reality but the alter ego of the Wood Estate Company," or, at most, the alter ego of the Wood Estate Company and Buel, manager of the mining company.

(3) That Buel and the secretary of the mining company had no authority from the mining company to execute the trust deed, for the reason that the resolution authorizing its execution was passed at an improperly and illegally assembled meeting of the board of directors of the mining company.

[1, 2] The contention of appellants that the trust deed was executed and delivered without consideration, and with the fraudulent intent of defeating appellants' probable judgment is amply refuted by the findings of the trial court as supported by the evidence. There is an abundance of evidence tending to show that during his lifetime E. K. Wood, deceased, had loaned to the mining company sums of money totaling $17,000, and that subsequent to his death, and at various times up to March 9, 1918 (the date the trust deed was executed), E. K. Wood's estate, the Wood Estate Company, had advanced and loaned to the mining company further sums aggregating $22,500, totaling $39,500. It is true that there is a conflict in the evidence on this point, but under elementary rules, that conflict must be determined in favor of respondent on this appeal. It very definitely appears, therefore, that the mining company, the trustor, was indebted to the Wood Estate Company, the beneficiary, in the sum of $39,500 for actual cash advanced and used by the mining company in carrying on its business, when on March 9, 1918, in response to numerous requests of its creditor for security, it executed its note in the above-mentioned amount, and delivered its trust deed as security therefor. The record discloses that the respondent, the Wood Estate Company bought in the property at the trustee's sale for $40,000, and so credited the mining company's account. This evidence, accepted by the trial court as reflecting the true situation, adequately disposes of the appellants' contentions that the trust deed was without consideration and executed with the fraudulent design of preventing appellants from collecting on any judgment they might thereafter procure in their action against the mining company.

[3, 4] Appellants' contention that the mining company was "in reality but the alter ego of the Wood Estate Company," or the alter ego of the Wood Estate Company and Buel, does not merit a very serious consideration. We feel that the evidence in this case falls far short of that necessary to permit this court to disregard the fiction of separate corporate existence. It is quite true that the respondent the Wood Estate Company was the owner of considerably over half the stock of the mining company, and it is also very likely that, as such majority stockholder, it controlled its policies. But these facts, standing alone, can avail appellants but little. The law is well settled that, in order to cast aside the legal fiction of a distinct corporate existence, it must appear that the corporation is the business conduit and alter ego of its stockholders, and that to recognize it as a separate entity would aid in the consummation of a wrong. In other words, not only must it appear that one man or two men own the stock and control the policies, but it must also be shown that there is such a unity of interest and ownership that the individuality of such corporation and such person or persons has ceased; and it must further appear from the facts that the observance of the fiction of separate existence would, under the circumstances, sanction a fraud or promote injustice. Minife v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, 487, 202 P. 673; Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 187 Cal. 7, 11, 200 P. 641; Ellet v. Los Altos Country Club Properties, 88 Cal. App. 740, 746, 264 P. 270. The court below, on ample evidence, found against appellants on the issue of bad faith. The record before us does not warrant a disregard of the corporate entity.

[5] The strongest attack made upon the validity of the trust deed by appellants is that the resolution authorizing its execution was not passed at a "duly assembled" meeting of the board of directors of the mining company. The facts upon which appellants predicate this contention are as follows: The by-laws of the mining company provide that each director shall, at the first meeting after his election, cause to be entered in the minutes his address, to which all notices may be directed until similar notice and entry of change of residence has by him been given in writing. Notice of special meetings of the board of directors, the by-laws also provide, shall be given by leaving a written or printed notice at the last-known place of business or residence of each director. It is the duty of the secretary to serve all notices required by law or the by-laws of the company. One of the directors of the mining company (Chamberlain) did not attend the meeting at which the resolution of authorization was passed, and neither received, nor waived, notice of its calling, nor consented in writing to its being held. The trial court found that all of the directors of the mining company had been elected on or about April 24, 1916, and "that on or about said date last named P. G. Chamberlain [the non-attending director], one of said directors, did not give his place of residence or his business address to the secretary of the corporation, nor has he at any time since given to said secretary, his residence or his business address; and that shortly after said date last named said Chamberlain disappeared, and his whereabouts became unknown and particularly to the secretary of said corporation and that at the time said meeting of said board of directors was had, said secretary did not have, nor for a long time prior thereto had not had or had not known, the place of residence or business address of said Chamberlain. The court further finds that divers meetings of said board of directors were held between the date of the organization of said corporation Plumas Grass Valley Mines Company and said 9th day of March, 1918, and that said P. G. Chamberlain did not attend any one of said meetings." Appellants therefore contend that, since one director was absent and not duly notified of the special meeting, as required by section 320, Civil Code, and in no way waived notice as required by section 320a of the Civil Code, the meeting of the board of directors was improperly and illegally assembled, and that therefore the resolution authorizing the trust deed was of no legal effect and could not confer authority on the officers therein designated to execute and deliver the instrument. Appellants rely on the general principle enunciated in such cases as Relley v. Campbell, 134 Cal. 175, 66 P. 220; Curtin v. Salmon River, etc., Co., 130 Cal. 347, 62 P. 552, 80 Am. St. Rep. 132; Richman v. Bank of Perris, 73 Cal. App. 321, 238 P. 754; Richman v. Bank of Perris (Cal. App.) 282 P. 801, and others—to the effect that a special meeting of the board of directors held without the requisite notice is void, and directors present thereat cannot perform any valid corporate act. Assuming, for the purpose of this opinion, but not deciding, that under the circumstances here presented the resolution of March 8, 1918, conferred no authority on Buel and the secretary to execute the trust deed, it does not follow that under the facts of this case the trust deed is not binding on the Mining company. Both appellants and respondent have failed to emphasize certain facts which to this court seem decisive of the issues presented. The trial court made the following finding:

"That on or about the 3rd day of October, 1916, one J. F. Buel was the vice-president and manager of said Mines Company and had full control of all of the operations and business of said mining company, and was at all times held out to the world by said mining company as its general manager and business agent. That said J. F. Buel, in his capacity of vice-president and manager of said mining company, represented to E. K. Wood, since deceased, that said mining company was in need of large sums of money with which to prosecute and bring to completion the work of developing certain mining properties and securing therefrom auriferous gravels in profitable quantities, and also to secure by purchase or lease additional mining properties, and that if said E. K. Wood would loan said mining company money to use for such purposes, said mining company would give to said E. K. Wood its note in payment thereof, and would secure the payment of said note by the execution of a deed of trust upon all its real property and a chattel mortgage on all its personal property. That said E. K. Wood did accept said proposition, and did loan to said mining company to the full sum of $17,000.00. That on the 27th day of July, 1917, and before the work of developing said mine was completed, said E. K. Wood died testate; and thereafter, after proceedings for that purpose had, Frederick J. Wood was appointed one of the executors of the last will and testament of said decedent, and that such executor became entitled to the possession of said indebtedness and the right to collect the same from said mining company. That said Frederick J. Wood, as such executor, agreed with said J. F. Buel as the manager of said corporation, to make further advances of money to said mining company for the purpose aforementioned, in consideration of the promise of said Buel, in behalf of said corporation, that said corporation would execute a note to cover all of the amounts theretofore loaned to it by said decedent E. K. Wood and such further advances as might be made by said executor out of the funds of said E. K. Wood estate, and would secure the payment of said note by the execution of a deed of trust conveying said real property and a chattel mortgage on its personal property to such trustees or persons as said Frederick J. Wood might name; and that, in consideration of said promise of said mining corporation and relying thereon, said Frederick J. Wood, out of the funds of said estate, did advance and pay to said mining corporation, the further sum of $22,500.00, making in all the aggregate sum of $39,500.00 received by said mining company from said E. K. Wood, and said Frederick J. Wood, as executor of the last will and testament of said E. K. Wood, deceased.

"That thereupon, on the 9th day of March, 1918, said mining company, in fulfillment of its said promise, executed the deed of trust mentioned in the cross-complaint on file herein, to-wit: that certain deed of trust dated the 9th day of March, 1918, made and executed by Plumas Grass Valley Mines Company, a corporation, party of the first part, to C. A. Thayer and H. W. B. Taylor, parties of the second part (trustees), and W. T. Wood and F. J. Wood, parties of the third part, which said deed of trust was thereafter on the 12th day of March, 1918, duly recorded in the office of the County Recorder of the County of Plumas, State of California, in Volume 17 of Mortgages, at page 267, and which deed of trust was given to secure the payment of a certain promissory note for the sum of $39,500.00 of even date with said deed of trust executed by said mining corporation to said W. T. Wood and F. J. Wood; and that said deed of trust was executed to the persons above named and they took and held the same, for the uses and benefit of said E. K. Wood Estate."

Thus it clearly appears from the findings that Buel was the general manager and business agent of the corporation, and was held out by the corporation as such. It further appears that as far back as October 3, 1916, this business agent represented to E. K. Wood that, if he (the said E. K. Wood) would advance certain moneys to the mining company, it (the mining company) would issue its promissory note, secured by a trust deed and chattel mortgage on all the mining company's property. It is obvious that, under the provisions of sections 2309 and 1624, subdivision 5, of the Civil Code, the authority of Buel to make such an agreement would have to be in writing; that is, evidenced by a resolution of the board of directors passed at a meeting duly assembled. The facts show that this precedent authority was never conferred. But, in reliance on the representations of Buel, E. K. Wood advanced to the mining company the sum of $17,000, and respondent the Wood Estate Company, also in reliance thereon, advanced a further sum of $22,500. Thus the total sum of $39,500 had been advanced by E. K. Wood or his estate to the mining company in reliance on Buel's promises and representations before March 9, 1918, the date Buel executed the trust deed. All of this money was received by the mining company with knowledge of the promise of its general manager and used by the corporation to carry on its activities. In fact, the evidence shows the mining company could probably not have continued in existence had not this money been advanced.

It would be clear, under well-settled doctrine, that, if Buel had executed the trust deed without precedent authority on October 3, 1916, the mining company would be estopped to deny his authority in so doing. But here the trust deed was executed March 9, 1918, by Buel and the secretary, after the moneys had been advanced in reliance on his promise that such a trust deed would be executed by the mining company. Assuming that the resolution of March 8, 1918, was legally insufficient to constitute either a ratification of Buel's promise or to confer authority on Buel to execute the trust deed (because one director was absent, as pointed out supra), this court can see no legal difference between a situation where the trust deed is issued when the promise is made and a situation as is here presented, where, in reliance on the promise, the money is advanced, and then the trust deed is executed by the agent in a good-faith attempt to carry out the promise.

[6] On the authority of the principle discussed above, we therefore hold that the mining company is estopped to deny Buel's authority in executing the trust deed, regardless of the validity of the resolution conferring that authority upon him. It is too elementary to need citation of authority that, if the corporation is estopped, in absence of fraud, the estoppel likewise applies against the creditors of the corporation. This is so because the creditors get only the rights of the debtor, and no more. 10 Cal. Jur. 652.

It should also be pointed out that the two parties to the trust deed—i. e., the mining company and respondent—are not seeking to avoid the instrument, but, in fact, both are seeking to uphold it. Appellants' objection is that the authority of the agent must be in writing under our statute of frauds. Just how a third party to such a contract can attack it, when the two principals do not object, is not made to appear. It would seem to be the rule that third parties cannot avail themselves of the defense of the statute if the two principals acquiesce. 12 Cal. Jur. 925; 25 R. C. L. 736.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

CHERNEY et al. v. JOHNSON et al.

Sac. 3971.

Supreme Court of California.

April 7, 1930.

1. Judgment ⇨720 — Action on merits — Appeal — Affirmance.

Matters considered in action decided on merits and affirmed on appeal held res judicata.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨339 — Balance due — Deposit — Delay — Purchase money — Recovery.

Delay of purchaser in depositing balance due on land contract as condition for performance after judgment did not preclude recovery of purchase money paid on vendor's failure to perform.

Judgment in prior action to enforce contract for sale of property provided for enforcement of contract on purchaser's depositing balance due within 30 days after judgment. Vendor agreed with purchaser that appeal should operate as stay of proceedings. Within 30 days after remittitur was indorsed filed by clerk, though more than 30 days after remittitur was transmitted to clerk, purchaser made required deposit. Vendor received every benefit during proceedings and failed to do things required of him by judgment and was in no way harmed by delay in filing deposit.

SEAWELL, J.

[1] Appeal from an order made after entry of an alternative decree. The cause out of which this action arises was heard and decided on its merits against the appellant on an original appeal. Cherney v. Johnson, 72 Cal. App. 725, 238 P. 150. A petition for hearing by this court was denied. The matters and things therein considered are res judicata.

The issues therein adjudicated, so far as they are necessary to an understanding of the instant appeal, were:

One R. N. Hicks was in possession of the land involved in suit, to wit, 57.51 acres situate in the county of Sacramento, under an executory contract of sale thereof to him by the Natomas Company, one of the defendants herein, but it has no pecuniary interest in the success of either the respondents or appellant. Appellant Johnson acquired an option in his own name from Hicks to purchase said lands, and thereupon respondents, who had sold their farm in Wisconsin, entered into an agreement with appellant for the purchase of said Natomas Company lands at the price of $18,690.75. Respondents paid down $9,000 and gave their promissory note for $1,000. The note was thereafter assigned by appellant Johnson to a third person. The balance of the purchase price was to be paid in eight or nine annual installments at the option of the respondents. The respondents, who never entered into possession, brought this action against appellant, alleging misrepresentations as to the quality of a certain portion of the land included in the agreement of sale and also noncompliance with the terms of said agreement on the part of appellant, and prayed for certain rebates upon the purchase price by reason of misrepresentations as to the quality of said lands and also by reason of overdue installments and reclamation assessments levied against it upon which bonds had been issued in the sum of $4,000, constituting a lien thereon; for the surrender and cancellation of said promissory note and for other specific and general relief. The court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment on February 27, 1923. By the judgment jurisdiction of the cause was retained to the end that a further judgment and decree might be entered in the event that Johnson should fail to comply with the terms of said judgment. As already pointed out, this judgment was affirmed upon appeal. The judgment provided that Johnson should specifically perform his contract with respondents; that within thirty days from the entry of the decree, respondents should pay to the clerk of the court one-eighth or one-ninth, as they shall elect, of the sum of $3,115.75, the sum adjudged to be due on said contract of purchase after making certain deductions on account of misrepresentations as to the quality of said lands and for other rebates, for each year that elapsed between March 26, 1920 (date of execution of agreement), and the date of said payment, with interest to the 26th day of March last preceding the date of payment, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, which sum was to be paid by said clerk to appellant Johnson upon delivery by him to said clerk of the receipt of the defendant Natomas Company of California or its successor in interest under the contract made by the Natomas Company with R. N. Hicks showing payment made to said company of all moneys due it to the date of the entry of the decree; that said Johnson should pay all water charges constituting a lien on said land to the date of the entry of the decree and all county taxes, prorating the taxes for the year 1922-23, from the 1st day of July, 1922, to the date of filing said receipt.

Respondents were adjudged to be entitled to possession of said property from and after the date of filing said receipt. It was also decreed that appellant Johnson should furnish and file with the clerk of the court an undertaking in the sum of $4,000 conditioned that he would comply with the terms and conditions of said contract with the Natomas Company; that if respondents, within thirty days from the date of filing said judgment, should make the payments therein provided to be made by them, and if the appellant shall fail to file said receipt within sixty days from the date of notice of said decree, said contract shall be declared terminated and rescinded and the clerk shall thereupon repay to plaintiffs the sums paid to him under the terms thereof and shall enter judgment in favor of respondents and against appellant Johnson in the sum of $10,000 with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from March 27, 1920, to the date of entry of said judgment; that upon payment in full to said appellant Johnson of the sums due and to grow due, in accordance with the terms of said contract of date March 26, 1920, appellant Johnson shall convey or cause to be conveyed to respondents the real property described in said contract by good and merchantable title, free from liens and incumbrance except liens created by respondents or accruing after the date of the filing of said receipt, and except the lien of said reclamation assessment. All payments becoming due under the terms of said reclamation assessments after the date of filing said receipt, and all water charges and taxes other than those provided to be paid by appellant, shall be paid and assumed by respondents.

Appellant was served with notice of entry of judgment as of March 1, 1923. Nine days thereafter, to wit, March 10, 1923, appellant served and filed his notice of appeal, which appeal resulted in an affirmance of the judgment. Pending the appeal appellant was in possession of said property, and both he and the respondents regarded the appeal as operating as a stay of proceedings, as no action was taken by either pending the appeal. Within thirty days after the day on which the remittitur was indorsed "Filed" by the clerk of the trial court, to wit, July 27, 1925, appellant was served with notice that the judgment had been theretofore entered, and further that respondents, pursuant to the judgment from which the appeal was taken, had deposited $2,665.75 with the clerk of said court, with directions to pay the said sum over to appellant Johnson upon his performance of the conditions imposed upon him by said decree as a condition precedent to the payment of said fund to him. The affidavit of the clerk of the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, is to the effect that the remittitur was issued July 22, 1925, and the package containing said remittitur bears the indorsement of the county clerk of Sacramento county as having been indorsed July 22, 1925. The clerk of the department of the superior court in which the case was tried was absent from his duties as such clerk at the time the remittitur arrived. He avers that he left the office on his vacation July 4 and did not return until Saturday, July 25, 1925. That upon his return on said day he found a great many papers and legal documents upon his desk, including said remittitur. That on the following Monday, to wit, July 27, 1925, he stamped the said remittitur as being filed of that day. No showing is made that any official note was made of its receipt prior to the day it was stamped as filed. It was not placed with the other papers in the case, but it was placed upon the desk of the department clerk with other papers and documents which had accumulated while the clerk was on his July vacation. The attorney who had charge of the instant case for respondents averred by affidavit that between July 27, 1925, and August 25, 1925, he inspected the records in the county clerk's office to ascertain the date of the receipt of the remittitur and found that it was marked as filed July 27, 1925, and he relied upon the filing mark as bearing the true date on which it was received. There is nothing in his affidavit inconsistent with that averment. Upon the state of the record as herein set out respondents, on December 15, 1925, notified appellant in writing that on Monday, December 21, 1925, they would move the court for an order directing the clerk of said court to enter judgment in said cause in favor of respondents and against the appellant in the sum of $10,000, said sum being the amount respondents paid to appellant under said agreement of March 26, 1920, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, to date of judgment, and further directing the clerk of said court to pay over to respondents said sum of $2,665.75, deposited by said respondents under the terms of the judgment theretofore entered.

The motion came before the court for hearing pursuant to said notice, and the court found, omitting matters not pertinent to the point involved, as follows:

"* * * That on July 21, 1925, the petition of the defendant Johnson for a hearing by the Supreme Court of this State was denied, that on July 22, 1925, the remittitur of said Appellate Court was transmitted to and delivered to the Clerk of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Sacramento, and that said remittitur, from the time of such delivery, was held in the possession of a deputy clerk of said court until July 27, 1925, on which date it was endorsed by said clerk "Filed" July 27, 1925, and on said last mentioned date was entered in the docket of said case as filed July 27, 1925; that between July 27, 1925, and August 25, 1925, attorneys for plaintiffs inspected the records of said case to ascertain the date of receipt of said remittitur by the Superior Court and saw and relied upon said filing mark as endorsed on said remittitur, as being the true date and believed that said last mentioned date was the true date of the receipt of said remittitur by the Superior Court; that within thirty days after July 27, 1925, and on August 25, 1925, plaintiffs, pursuant to the terms of said decree herein, deposited with the Clerk of this court the sum of Two thousand six hundred sixty-five and 75/100 ($2,665.75) Dollars, being the amount of principal payments and of interest thereon, accrued and payable on the date of said deposit under the terms of the contract sued upon herein, as said contract was construed and declared specifically enforceable by the decree of specific performance, entered herein on February 28, 1923;

"That defendant Johnson has performed none of the acts enjoined upon him by the terms of said decree; that said sum so deposited by plaintiffs is still in the possession of said Clerk; that pending said appeal, the making of said deposit by plaintiffs was stayed; that said deposit was made within the time required by law and by the terms of said judgment of February 28, 1923; that time was not of the essence of said original contract, so specifically enforced, nor of the essence of said judgment of February 28, 1923; that the defendant Johnson was not injured by the delay, if any, in making said deposit;

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the clerk of this court pay over to plaintiffs the said sum of Two thousand six hundred sixty-five and 75/100 ($2,665.75) Dollars, heretofore deposited by plaintiffs with said clerk, accepting the receipt of plaintiffs' attorneys therefor, and

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that plaintiffs have judgment against the defendant Johnson in the sum of Fourteen thousand one hundred fifty and no/100 ($14,150.00) Dollars, being said sum of Ten thousand ($10,000) Dollars, with interest thereon from the 27th day of March, 1920, to the date hereof, at the rate of 7% per annum. * * *

From the latest judgment this appeal is taken, the rights and obligations of the parties under said contract having been determined by the first judgment from which the appeal was taken.

[2] The only points made on this appeal are that respondents did not make payment of the amount found by the court to be due appellant within the thirty days' period fixed by the alternative judgment, and further, granting that the appeal stayed all proceedings, the said deposit with the clerk was not made within thirty days after the remittitur was actually received by the clerk. We think there is no substantial merit in these contentions.

The appellant filed no bond upon taking the appeal, yet he received every benefit that would have been conferred by the furnishing of an undertaking on appeal. He did none of the things which the alternative judgment imposed upon him and during the pendency of the appeal he had the use and benefit of $10,000, money of respondents, and also the possession of the real property in suit. Respondents received no benefit whatever from the transaction except legal interest for the use of their money which had passed into appellant's hands. The parties to the action and the court treated the appeal taken from the alternative judgment as staying proceedings. The inaction of appellant gave color to the mutual belief that the appeal acted as a stay, and he made no move that would tend to disturb such belief. The reciprocal duties cast upon appellant were greater than those cast upon respondents. The appellant was receiving every benefit that he would have enjoyed had he given an appeal bond. He lost nothing by the delay and he was doubtless anxious that the status quo should be preserved. With this state of facts before us, even though the proceedings were not stayed by operation of sections 942, 943, Code of Civil Procedure, the situation is such that appellant should not be allowed to doubly profit by the grace which had been extended to him.

The question as to the coming down of the remittitur was considered and disposed of by the court in its judgment, and we are in accord with the disposition therein made.

Judgment affirmed.

Supreme Court of California.

April 8, 1930.

Rehearing Denied May 8, 1930.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨224 — Guardian's lien — Death of ward — Claim against estate.

Guardian claiming lien against estate of deceased ward for sums expended was not required to present claim against estate (Code Civ. Proc. § 1493).

2. Guardian and ward ⇨68 — Reimbursement of guardian — Sums rightfully expended.

Court could authorize reimbursement of sums rightfully expended by guardian on behalf of ward, and allow full amount to which equity entitled her.

3. Guardian and ward ⇨22 — Guardian's lien — Ward's death — Tracing property.

Guardian could trace into deceased ward's estate and impress with her lien for sums expended as guardian such property of her ward as was actually or constructively in her possession (Code Civ. Proc. § 1765).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1765 provides that lawfully appointed guardian has care and custody of person of his ward and management of all his estate according to order of appointment.

4. Guardian and ward ⇨163 — Guardian's expenditures — Reasonableness — Court's determination — Binding effect in other proceedings.

Court's determination of reasonableness of sums claimed by guardian in accounting was binding in proceedings to subject assets of deceased ward's estate to lien.

PRESTON, J.

Appeal from order of superior court of Los Angeles county subjecting assets of an estate of a ward to a charge and lien in favor of her guardian.

Said ward named appellant as executrix of her estate under a last will and testament dated July 20, 1926, and she also established a joint bank account with right of survivorship in the names of herself and appellant. Appellant also had possession of certain of her personal property which was located in Los Angeles county, where she resided. Later, said ward removed temporarily to Monterey county, and, under proceedings instituted in the superior court there, respondent was appointed guardian of her person and estate and went into actual possession of certain other personal property consisting of some valueless stock and a few articles of wearing apparel.

Said ward died on December 12, 1926, in Monterey county, although still a resident of Los Angeles county. Appellant was thereupon duly appointed executrix under said will. She thereafter caused publication of first notice to creditors to be made on February 3, 1927. Said guardian proceeding meanwhile in Monterey county presented, to the superior court there, her final account and on April 7, 1927, that court made an order settling the account and allowing her, as a charge and lien against the property and estate of said decedent, the total sum of $1,150.08, covering $775.08, items paid out by her both before and after her appointment as guardian for the support and maintenance of said ward, together with $200 for her services and $175 on account of attorney's fees. During the month of September, 1927, said guardian presented her claim for said amount supplemented by a copy of the order made by the Monterey county court, to said executrix, who promptly rejected it. Thereafter, said guardian filed in the probate proceeding in Los Angeles county a motion for an order to subject the assets of the estate to said charge. Said executrix resisted the motion upon the ground first, that the claim was filed several months after the time had expired within which claims could be filed against the estate and, second, that the court was without jurisdiction to subject the estate to the said lien. Upon the hearing, the superior court of Los Angeles county made its order subjecting the assets of said estate to a first lien in favor of respondent for the sum of $1,260.07, from which appellant, as said executrix, prosecutes this appeal.

[1] Was the guardian in this action required to present a claim against said estate as contemplated by section 1493 of the Code of Civil Procedure?

The case of Estate of Clanton, 171 Cal. 381, 153 P. 459, 461, respondent claims, announces the rule applicable to property impressed with the lien of a guardian; that it may be traced into the estate and may be subjected to the satisfaction of obligations due the beneficiary and the guardian will not, by failing to present a claim, be held to have waived his recourse against the estate of his ward. In this behalf the court there said: "Next it is argued that the guardian waived his recourse against the estate of his ward because he failed to present any claim. * * * While it is true that the relation of guardian or administrator to the ward, the heirs and the estate is one of contractual nature (Estate of Kincaid, 120 Cal. 205, 52 P. 492), and that a liability of one to the other growing out of such a relation is a contractual liability, it does not follow that, unless a claim against the estate of the deceased be filed, the guardian of the incompetent waives all recourse. The guardian is not asking a personal judgment. He could not obtain one if he were. Estate of Boyes, 151 Cal. 151, 90 P. 454; Estate of Kincaid, 120 Cal. 205, 52 P. 492. All that he can obtain on the settlement of such account is an order declaring his claim for overpayment a charge against the estate of the ward and directing its payment out of any moneys on hand belonging to the ward. That he has a right to have such charge or lien declared is settled. Estate of Moore, 96 Cal. 530, 31 P. 584; Finnerty v. Pennie, 100 Cal. 407, 34 P. 869; Estate of Boyes, 151 Cal. 151, 90 P. 454. This being the case, he has the further right, under section 1500, Code of Civil Procedure, to obtain this relief in the proceeding for the accounting, without having filed or presented a claim against the estate. * * * In Rogers v. Schlotterback, 167 Cal. 52, 138 P. 728, it was held that property impressed with a trust or that property's equivalent in a new form, when traced into the estate, and so into the hands of the personal representative of the deceased trustee, may be subjected to the satisfaction of the obligations due to the beneficiary, even though no claim against the estate has been previously presented. The same rule applies to property impressed with the lien of a guardian.

[2] That it was also within the power of the court to authorize reimbursement of all sums rightfully expended by said guardian on behalf of said ward and to allow her the full amount to which equity entitles her is also plain, for in the above cause the court further said: "Some of the items of the account approved by the court were for expenditures without formal allowance previously made by the court. Under our liberal system, if the expenditures of the guardian have been just and equitable, they will be allowed, regardless of the obtaining or failure to secure orders of the court authorizing them. 'The criterion for determining whether a past maintenance should be allowed is whether a chancery court would have authorized it in advance.' In re Beisel's Estate, 110 Cal. 276, 40 P. 961, 42 P. 819. The same rule is declared in Estate of Boyes, 151 Cal. 155, 90 P. 454."

[3] Appellant, however, strenuously objects to application of the above ruling in this action, contending that the case is distinguishable upon the facts from the case at bar, in that it concerns only property which was in the constructive possession of the guardian while the case at bar concerns property over which the guardian never had any claim of right whatsoever. The Clanton Case was a proceeding of an equitable nature brought to settle the account of a guardian after death of his ward. Virtually all of the estate consisted of real property which, having been surrendered by the guardian, the court authorized the administrator of the ward's estate to sell, the proceeds of sale passing to said administrator. Refuting the contention there made that the surrender of said property and its sale destroyed the lien of the guardian because such lien could not be extended to the fruits of the sale, the court held: "Appellants seem to admit that, if the guardian had in his possession the property which he administered, or if the estate of the decedent still possessed it, then 'it might be contended that an order made by this court would be effectual to charge such estate.' Undoubtedly proceedings by the guardian for the settlement of his accounts are in rem, and not against the person of the ward as such. Estate of Kincaid, 120 Cal. 205, 52 P. 492; Estate of Boyes, 151 Cal. 151, 90 P. 454. But the guardian in this proceeding was not seeking a personal judgment. He was insisting that the lien upon the real property for the amount of his advances should extend to the proceeds of the sale of the said realty. If that fund were insufficient to pay his claims as guardian, he would have no deficiency judgment which he might enforce against any property that might come into the hands of the administrator from sources other than the estate of the incompetent. But we see no reason why his equitable lien may not extend to the fund resulting from the sale of the interest of the decedent in the land. It must be remembered that this is an equitable proceeding (citing cases). There could be no sale by the guardian of his ward's land after the latter's death. * * * It is the guardian's duty after the death of the ward to settle his account with the court, or with the administrator. Section 1754, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc. To be sure, the provisions of that section refer to obligations which may be enforced under the guardian's bond, but they accurately define the duties of the guardian. The court of equity, having the entire matter before it, could declare the existence of the lien upon the proceeds of the sale of the land, and could direct the payment of the amount due the guardian out of that sum."

Therefore, considering the last-mentioned contention of appellant herein, and as the views above set forth make it plain that respondent could succeed in tracing into said estate and impressing with her lien as a guardian such property of her ward as was actually or constructively in her possession, we are left with the question of whether the entire estate of said ward, which included money turned into the estate from said joint bank account, situate within the state of California, was by reason of said guardianship proceedings placed in the constructive possession of said guardian.

[4] Section 1765 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a lawfully appointed guardian has the care and custody of the person of his ward and the management of all his estate according to the order of appointment. Unfortunately the transcript does not contain a copy of the order appointing respondent; presumably, however, she was appointed a general guardian. See sections 236-239, inclusive, Civ. Code. Section 239 provides: "A general guardian is a guardian of the person or of all the property of the ward within this state, or of both." In other words, under the showing made by the record, which contains copies of orders made subsequent to said order of appointment by both Monterey and Los Angeles courts and in the absence of any contention to the contrary, we are warranted in concluding that said order of appointment was couched in general terms, entitling respondent to recover the items claimed by her and subjecting not only the Monterey property, which was in her actual possession, but which she surrendered to the estate, but also all the other property of said ward within the state, to a constructive trust in her favor for the amount due, the determination of the Monterey court, under the showing made, with respect to the reasonableness of the sums claimed by respondent being also final and binding upon us in this proceeding.

[5] Under section 1789 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that proceedings for settlement of the accounts of guardians and notice required thereof, are the same as those required by the provisions of said Code concerning estates of decedents, section 1634 of said Code, which provides for final settlement of the accounts of an administrator or executor, becomes applicable in a proceeding of this nature as to the notice required for the settlement of the final account of a guardian and notice must therefore be given for a full period of ten days before the hearing. Livermore v. Ratti, 150 Cal. 458, 89 P. 327. That appellant, in this case, had both actual and constructive notice of respondent's claim long prior to the commencement of said ten-day period, is apparent from the above statement of facts.

[6] The ward's estate consisted of both real and personal property. The proceedings in the Monterey court were instituted prior to the estate proceedings in Los Angeles. From the above pronouncements it, therefore, follows that the former court had jurisdiction to make said order extending respondent's lien to the Los Angeles property and the Los Angeles court acquired jurisdiction thereof subject to restrictions, orders, or liens imposed upon it by said Monterey court; hence, its action in making the order from which this appeal is taken was proper.

The judgment is affirmed.

McKEON v. NEUSCHWANDER.

No. 12861.

Supreme Court of California.

April 7, 1930.

I. Action $\Leftrightarrow$ 2 — Lost lease — Sale of leasehold — Lessor's liability.

Lessee who lost copy of lease, and whom lessor refused second copy, could not recover damages from lessor resulting from consequent inability to sell leasehold.

It appeared from the lessee's complaint that the lessee lost his lease and requested another copy of the lessor which the lessor refused to furnish, and that thereupon the lessee commenced an action to restore the lost lease. However, between the time of the lessee's request for second copy and the entry of the judgment restoring the lease as a lost document, the lessee had been offered, by a bona fide purchaser, the sum of $12,500 for his interest in the leasehold, and by reason of the fact that he did not have his lease and by reason of the refusal of the lessor to execute a copy, the lessee was unable to sell his leasehold interest.

2. Action ⇨1 — Right — Duty — Violation.

Cause of action involves primary right, corresponding duty, and violation thereof.

3. Action ⇨2 — Lost lease — Furnishing new copy — Lessor's duty.

Lessor owes lessee no duty to supply second copy of lost lease on lessee's request.

4. Lost instruments ⇨3 — Lost lease — Proceeding for restoration — Second copy — Landlord's refusal.

Sole remedy of lessee, on lessor's unwillingness to supply second copy of lost lease, is by proceeding to have document judicially restored, and lessor's refusal is material only on question of costs in restoration proceeding.

Action by Christopher D. McKeon against Matilda Neuschwander. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

WASTE, C. J.

Plaintiff prosecutes this appeal from a judgment for costs entered in favor of the defendant upon the sustaining of a general demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend. From the allegations of the complaint it appears that on March 8, 1922, the defendant, by written instrument, let and demised to the plaintiff, for a period of seven years, certain real property situate in the city and county of San Francisco; that during the term of said lease the plaintiff lost and mislaid his copy of the lease; that in the months of July and September, 1926, plaintiff requested the defendant to execute and deliver to him another copy of said lease; that defendant at all times neglected and refused to comply with such request; that plaintiff thereupon commenced an action having for its purpose the restoration of the lost lease; that judgment was thereafter duly entered in such action restoring said lease; that between the time plaintiff first requested the defendant to execute and deliver to him a second copy of the lease and the entry of the judgment restoring it as a lost document, plaintiff had been offered by a bona fide purchaser the sum of $12,500 for all of his right, title, and interest in and to the leasehold premises; and that, "by reason of the fact that plaintiff did not have his lease, which was lost as hereinabove alleged, and by reason of the refusal of defendant to execute a copy thereof and to restore the same, plaintiff was unable to and could not sell all of his right, title and interest in and to said lease," all to his damage in the sum of $12,500.

[1-4] We are of opinion that the court below properly sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend. The case is apparently one of first impression, for our research has failed to disclose any case presenting for adjudication the precise point here involved. Plaintiff concedes that he is urging a novel point, and his brief cites us to but one case which has to do solely with the right of an interested party to proceed either in equity or at law under a pertinent statute or code section to secure the judicial restoration of a lost document (Brown v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irr. Dist., 183 Cal. 186, 190 P. 797) wherein our law upon this subject is fully stated. There can, of course, be no question but that plaintiff had the right to proceed, as he in fact did, to have his lost lease judicially restored. A suit of this character, however, is "not one for relief against a wrong committed by the defendant, but is one to enforce a right in the plaintiff." Brown v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irr. Dist., supra, page 188 of 183 Cal., 190 P. 797, 798. This "right" to have a lost document judicially restored merely means that there is available to an interested party a proceeding wherein, upon competent evidence, he may have the terms and provisions of such lost document judicially declared. It does not carry with it the right to compel, and we have been unable to find any statute requiring, the other party to such document to furnish a second copy thereof to take the place of the lost copy. In other words, the defendant was not legally obliged to comply with the plaintiff's request in this regard. It is essential to the statement of any cause of action that there be a primary right and corresponding duty and a violation thereof. McKee v. Dodd, 152 Cal. 637, 641, 93 P. 854, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 780, 125 Am. St. Rep. 82. The absence of these essential elements precludes the plaintiff herein from stating a good cause of action, and the defendant's demurrer to the complaint was, therefore, properly sustained without leave to amend.

The defendant being unwilling to supply a second copy of the lease to the plaintiff, the latter's sole and only remedy in this connection was to proceed to have the document judicially restored. This course he regularly pursued. Defendant's refusal to furnish the requested copy of the lease could be "material only on the question of the defendant being liable for costs" in the restoration proceeding. Brown v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irr. Dist., supra, page 188 of 183 Cal., 190 P. 797. Inspection of the judgment entered in that proceeding, a copy of which appears in the transcript herein, tends to indicate that the plaintiff availed himself of the right to recover his costs therein. Plaintiff's alleged loss is chargeable to his own carelessness in misplacing, or his misfortune in losing, his copy of the lease, rather than to any violation of a legal right or breach of a legal duty by the defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

4. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 53(2)—Purchaser agreeing with tenant in possession that he should retain possession held not to justify tenant's withholding possession from subsequent purchaser.

Agreement between purchaser of property and tenant in possession that purchaser wanted tenant to stay in possession and keep premises up in condition it was at time in order that purchaser might resell property held not to justify tenant's withholding possession from subsequent purchaser.

5. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 53(2)—Agreement between purchaser and tenant in possession regarding rent held not intended to give tenant right to possession without paying rent after title passed to subsequent purchaser.

Agreement between purchaser of premises and tenant in possession that, in event of purchaser's failure to take and pay for personal property within 30 days, tenant shall be relieved of payment of any rental, held not intended to give tenant continuing right to hold property without payment of rent after title had passed to stranger to agreement.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 1071(6)—Failure to find on affirmative matters in answer held not prejudicial error, where findings thereon must under evidence necessarily have been adverse to appellants.

Failure of trial court to find on all affirmative matters set up in answer held not prejudicial error where, if findings thereon had been made, they must necessarily have been adverse to appellants under uncontradicted evidence.

PRESTON, J.

After a careful reconsideration of this cause, we adopt, as the opinion of this court herein, the opinion heretofore rendered by Mr. Presiding Justice Finch of the Third Appellate District as follows:

The plaintiff was given judgment against the defendants for the sum of $700 as the reasonable rental value of the premises in Cloverdale, Sonoma county, known as "Dad Snyder's Inn," for a period of seven months, commencing October 14, 1925. The defendants have appealed from the judgment.

The answer admits that the plaintiff was the owner of the property during the seven months mentioned, that the defendants were in possession thereof during all of that time, and that the reasonable monthly rental value thereof was $100. Relying on such admissions, the plaintiff introduced no evidence.

The facts hereinafter stated appear from the testimony of the defendants and documentary evidence concerning which there is no dispute.

On and prior to September 9, 1920, and at all times thereafter until March 28, 1925, the defendants Spoerke and Thompson were the owners of the property mentioned; the title standing in Spoerke's name. On September 9, 1920, in like manner, they owned and held the personal property used in and in connection with the inn. On the day last mentioned, they, in Spoerke's name, entered into an agreement with the defendant Snyder, by the terms of which they leased the inn to him until March 1, 1922, at a rental of $75 a month, and gave him an option to buy the property for $11,500. In the same instrument they agreed to sell the personal property to him for $3,500, $1,000 of which was to be paid in cash and the remainder in installments. The agreement provided that the owners might sell the premises "at any time during said lease," and that, in the event of such a sale, "the buyer must also buy the furniture therein contained." Snyder went into possession under the lease, and he has been in the actual possession thereof continuously since such entry. March 28, 1925, Spoerke conveyed the real property to W. T. Hopkins, and the latter gave his promissory note in payment of the purchase price, secured by a deed of trust covering the same property. Snyder and Hopkins executed an agreement, dated April 2, 1925, by the terms of which Snyder agreed to deliver possession of the premises to Hopkins and a bill of sale of the personal property upon his payment within 30 days of $4,000 for the personal property, Snyder to pay rental at the rate of $100 a month for the time he might remain in possession but providing "that in the event the said sum of $4,000 is not paid as hereinabove specified within the said period of 30 days, then and (in) that event this agreement shall become null and void, and the said party of the first part shall be relieved of the necessity of delivering up possession of the said premises or executing the said bill of sale or the payment of any rental as herein specified." Hopkins failed to make the payment provided for in the agreement, and it appears that he made no attempt to carry out the terms of the agreement. It appears that he conveyed the premises to the plaintiff, because, as stated, the pleadings admit that the plaintiff became the owner thereof on October 14, 1925. The plaintiff served notice on the defendants of his purchase of the property, and demanded that they pay rental at $350 a month or vacate the premises, but they did neither. Spoerke thereafter caused the premises to be sold under the terms of the trust deed. He became the purchaser at the sale and received a deed for the property May 15, 1926.

The answer of the defendants covers 15 pages of the transcript. In addition to denials and admissions of averments of the complaint, it sets up affirmative matters as a defense, and then proceeds to allege four further separate defenses. There is some uncertainty as to the particular grounds upon which the appellants rely for a reversal. In their closing brief they say: "Respondent complains that we do not specify the defense we rely on. * * * The only variable quantity in the various defenses is the way in which the relation between Thompson and Spoerke on the one hand, and Snyder on the other, is pleaded. We have this pleaded in three ways: First, that the relation is that of principal and agent. Second, vendor and vendee, and, third, landlord and tenant. The evidence discloses the exact relationship of the parties and shows that same was that of the vendor and vendee. Under the terms of this contract the vendee was to pay the vendor $75 each month as installments on the purchase price."

The answer alleges that by the agreement of September 9, 1920, Snyder agreed to pay the purchase price of the real property "in installments of $75 each and every month," but the agreement contains no such provision or any provision binding Snyder to purchase such property on any terms whatever. By that agreement he was given a mere option to purchase the property at the price stated therein. The answer alleges "that on the 28th day of March, 1925, said defendant, Frederic Spoerke, conveyed said property to one W. F. Hopkins." There is no denial of the allegation of the complaint "that the plaintiff became the owner of the said premises on the 14th day of October, 1925." The answer alleges that Spoerke purchased the property at the sale under the trust deed, and that the property was thereupon conveyed to him, and that "the said Frederic Spoerke ever since said time has been, and still is, the owner of said property, but that the defendant W. H. Thompson ever since said day, has likewise owned an interest therein." It thus appears that there is no basis for the claim that, during the period for which the plaintiff was allowed the rental value of the premises, Snyder was in possession thereof as the vendee of his codefendants, or that they had any interest in the property other than their rights under the trust deed.

[1-3] There is nothing in the record which would warrant a finding that the defendants, or any of them, were in possession of the property as beneficiaries under the trust deed. It was not introduced in evidence, and its terms were not proved. Appellants contend that such beneficiaries were in the same position as "mortgagees in possession," and that therefore they were liable at most for the income they received from the property. "A 'mortgagee in possession' is one who takes possession of the mortgaged land by virtue of an agreement between him and the mortgagor, and in recognition of the relation between them." Freeman v. Campbell, 109 Cal. 360, 362, 42 P. 35. No such an agreement was proved in this case. A trust deed passes the legal title, "but it conveys no right of possession, and the trustor may remain in possession, and, until the execution of the trust, may maintain an action to recover possession even when the trust deed is silent upon the subject of possession." Sacramento Bank v. Alcorn, 121 Cal. 379, 383, 53 P. 813, 814; Hollywood Lumber Co. v. Love, 155 Cal. 270, 273, 100 P. 698; MacLeod v. Moran, 153 Cal. 97, 100, 94 P. 604. Under these authorities, the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the property upon the conveyance thereof to him, and the defendants are liable for the reasonable rental value thereof for the time they wrongfully retained the possession thereof. Civ. Code, § 3334.

[4] There is testimony that, at the time Hopkins and Snyder executed the agreement of April 2, 1925, "Mr. Hopkins told Mr. Snyder that he wanted him to stay in possession and keep it up in the condition it was at that time in order that he might resell the property," but this is no justification for withholding possession from a subsequent purchaser of the property.

[5] The provision in the agreement of April 2, 1925, that, in the event of Hopkins' failure to take and pay for the personal property within 30 days, Snyder "shall be relieved of * * * the payment of any rental as herein specified," must be construed as relating to the period of time within which Hopkins was given the right to complete the purchase of the property, at the end of which time the agreement was to become "null and void" in the event of failure to pay for the property. That provision certainly was not intended to give Snyder the continuing right to hold the property without payment of rent after the lapse of six months, when the title had passed to a stranger to the agreement.

[6] It is true, as contended by the appellants, that the trial court did not find on all the affirmative matters set up in the answer. If findings thereon had been made, however, under the uncontradicted evidence relating to every material issue so raised, such findings must necessarily have been adverse to the defendants, and therefore it was not prejudicial error not to find thereon. 24 Cal. Jur. 944.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Action ~~64~~48(1) — Replevin and quieting title — Uniting causes of action.

Complaint against assignee of automobile conditional sales contract, wrongfully assigned, seeking claim and delivery of contract and to quiet title to automobile, was proper (Code Civ. Proc. § 427).

Code Civ. Proc. § 427, authorizes joinder of several causes of action in same complaint under certain circumstances, as where all causes arise out of contracts, expressed or implied; claims to recover specific personal property; injuries to property; or claims arising out of same transaction, or transactions connected with same subject of action.

2. Factors ~~64~~51 — Assignee of conditional sales contract — Charged with notice.

Assignee of automobile conditional sales contract from factor indebted to assignee, making effort to trace title, was charged with notice of factor's defective title (Civ. Code, § 19).

It appeared that plaintiff corporation delivered automobile to retail dealer, with authority to sell within thirty days for cash, and dealer wrongfully sold it under conditional sales contract which he assigned to defendant. The dealer was indebted to defendant, which had received at least one check from him which had been returned for insufficient funds. Defendant made some effort to trace title by inquiry regarding its registration, but finding no trace of title made no further investigation. Civ. Code, § 19, provides that one having actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put prudent person upon inquiry has constructive notice of facts which, by prosecuting inquiry, he might have discovered.

[1] This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff in an action to recover the possession of a contract of conditional sale, or the value thereof, and to quiet the plaintiff's title as against any interest claimed by the defendant in and to an automobile which was the personal property described in the contract.

The Henderson Securities Corporation, the predecessor of the plaintiff trustees thereof, and herein referred to as the plaintiff, delivered the automobile to P. A. Hunter, doing a retail automobile business at Vallejo under the name of Vallejo Motor Sales Company, with authority to Hunter to sell the automobile within thirty days for cash. Disregarding and in violation of his authority as a factor Hunter sold the car and delivered it to George A. Jewett under a contract of conditional sale, taking the contract in the name of his own company. Hunter at the time was indebted to the defendant on certain automobile transactions and had given the defendant a check for some $1,700 on account of such indebtedness, which check was returned to the defendant because of insufficient funds in the account against which it was drawn. The defendant pressed Hunter for payment, whereupon Hunter assigned his contract with Jewett to the defendant, the assignment being dated June 3, 1927. The plaintiff learned of the assignment on June 6th, made demand on the defendant on June 8th, and brought this action shortly thereafter.

The complaint is in two counts; the first, in claim and delivery of the Jewett contract, and the second, to quiet the plaintiff's title in and to any interest in the car claimed by the defendant. We find no merit in the defendant's contention of misjoinder, as the joinder appears to be authorized by section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The allegations of the complaint were of the ultimate facts, and the court made findings in favor of the plaintiff in similar form. The main contention to be considered is whether the evidence is sufficient to support the findings.

[2, 3] It is conceded that Jewett was an innocent purchaser for value and is to be protected in his possession of the car. The plaintiff was also innocent of any wrong doing or negligence in the transaction. The defendant knew of the unsatisfactory business conduct of Hunter. When it obtained the Jewett contract from Hunter, the defendant's representative expressed concern as to the title to the car, and made an effort to trace the title by inquiry at Sacramento as to its registration. Finding no trace of the title there, the defendant made no further independent inquiry. The facts were abundant to arouse the suspicions of the defendant as to Hunter's title and to put the defendant upon further inquiry as to the title, information as to which was readily available at the place of business of the distributor of the car in San Francisco. Section 19, Civ. Code. The defendant was therefore charged with notice of the defective title, and the implied finding of the trial court that the defendant had such notice has sufficient evidentiary support. The case is one wherein the trusted agent has embezzled the proceeds belonging to the owner of the car, which proceeds may be followed by the principal wheresoever they may be traced and be recovered as against any one having notice or legally charged with notice of the agent's unauthorized manipulations. National Bank of New Zealand v. Finn, 81 Cal. App. 317, 253 P. 757; 25 C. J. 416.

WETENHALL v. CHAS. S. MABREY CONST. CO. et al.
S. F. 13312.

Supreme Court of California.

April 9, 1930.

Partnership 64—Name of individual trader followed by word "company" was not fictitious, and individual trading under that name could sue without filing certificate (Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468).

Sole trader's use of his name and initials, followed by word "company," did not necessitate filing of certificate stating name and place of residence under Civ. Code, §§ 2466, and 2468, as condition to maintaining action, since name adopted was not fictitious, in view of fact that individual business, and not partnership business, was involved.

Action by W. S. Wetenhall, doing business under the name and style of the W. S. Wetenhall Company, against the Chas. S. Mabrey Construction Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

WASTE, C. J.

This appeal by the defendants from a judgment entered on the pleadings presents the question whether or not an individual doing business as such and using his own name and initials, followed by the word "Company," is required to file with the clerk of the county and publish the certificate required by sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code. On petition to this court, after decision and judgment in the District Court of Appeal, it was contended that the decisions on the subject were not uniform, in that an opposite view to that expressed by the decision in this case had been reached by the District Court of Appeal of another district in Collection Service Corporation v. Conlin (Cal. App.) 277 P. 749, 750, in which case a hearing in this court had not been sought.

Our examination discloses that the facts of the two cases are essentially different. In the Conlin Case it was alleged and found that the assignor of the plaintiff "was doing business under the [registered] fictitious name of," etc. (italics ours), which distinguishes the case from the one at bar. We are therefore content to adopt, as the opinion and decision of this court, the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, prepared by Mr. Justice pro tem. H. L. Preston, viz.:

This is an action by plaintiff against the contractor as principal and the bonding company, above named, as surety, for materials furnished to the contractor and used in the construction of a building in San Bruno, Cal.

Appellants rely upon two special defenses which are set forth in their answer: First, "that plaintiff has failed to comply with the provisions of section 2466 to section 2468, inclusive, of the Civil Code of the State of California, and for that reason said action is barred." Paragraph I of the complaint is as follows: "That plaintiff now is and was at all times herein mentioned doing business under the name and style of W. S. Wetenhall Company, with his office and principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco." Section 2466 of the Civil Code provides: " * * * Every person transacting business in this state under a fictitious name and every partnership transacting business in this state under a fictitious name, or a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, must file with the clerk of the county in which his or its principal place of business is situated, a certificate, stating the name in full and the place of residence of such person and stating the names in full of all members of such partnership and their places of residence."

The first question, therefore, to be determined is whether the name "W. S. Wetenhall Company" is a fictitious name. An examination of the following authorities fully convinces us that the name "W. S. Wetenhall Company" is not fictitious. Spreckels v. Grace Darling Hospital Ass'n., 28 Cal. App. 646, 648, 153 P. 718; Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 P. 659; Carlock v. Cagnacci, 88 Cal. 600, 601, 26 P. 597; McLean v. Crow, 88 Cal. 644, 647, 26 P. 596; Lamberson v. Bashore, 167 Cal. 387, 391, 139 P. 817; Andrews v. Glick (Cal. Sup.) 272 P. 587; Hall et al. v. King (Cal. App.) 279 P. 814.

If the name "W. S. Wetenhall Company" is not fictitious, then he does not come within the purview of section 2466 at all, for the reason that he is an individual doing business under the name and style of "W. S. Wetenhall Company," and is not a partnership. That portion of section 2466 of the Civil Code reading "or a designation not showing the names of persons interested as partners in such business," etc., refers only to partnerships and not to an individual. Or, in other words, if the name used by W. S. Wetenhall is not fictitious and no other person is interested with him in the business, he does not have to comply with said section 2466. This section is not susceptible of any other reasonable interpretation. Our conclusion is strengthened by the language used in the latter part of section 2468 of the Civil Code, which reads: "No person doing business under a fictitious name, * * * nor any persons doing business as partners contrary to the provisions of this article, * * * shall maintain any action * * * until the certificate has been filed and the publication has been made. * * *"

We are not unmindful of the fact that in such cases as Andrews v. Glick, supra; Hall v. King, supra; North v. Moore, 135 Cal. 621, 67 P. 1037; Schwarz & Gottlieb, Inc. v. Marcuse, 175 Cal. 401, 165 P. 1015; Nicholson v. Auburn Gold Min., etc., Co., 6 Cal. App. 547, 92 P. 651, and similar cases, the courts have held that the various names used, while not fictitious, were designations not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in the business, and therefore were required to file the certificate under section 2466 of the Civil Code. An examination, however, of these cases will show that in all of them two or more persons were interested in the business. We have been unable to discover any case in which a single individual who was doing business under a name not his own, but one which was not fictitious, was required to comply with said section 2466, before he could maintain an action, notwithstanding, from the name used alone it might be impossible to determine how many persons were interested in the business.

The second contention made by appellants is wholly without merit. The portion of the answer relied upon does not raise any issue whatever, and needs no special discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

ISAACSON v. UNION TRUST CO. OF SAN DIEGO et al.*

L. A. 9525.

Supreme Court of California.

April 1, 1930.

Rehearing Granted April 28, 1930.

1. Pleading $\S$ 237(3)—In trustee's action to establish trust in stock for bankrupt, trial amendment, conforming to proof alleging fraudulent pledge and sale to pledgee, was properly allowed.

In action by trustee of bankrupt to establish secret trust for benefit of bankrupt and to have title to stock vested in trustee, amendment to complaint to conform to proof, alleging execution of promissory note by bankrupt to defendant, fraudulent pledge of stock, and pretended sale to pledgee, was properly allowed as not altering essential characteristics of action, where pledgee stated he did not wish continuance when matter was suggested.

2. Pleading $\S$ 236(3) — Allowance of trial amendment to pleadings is within court's discretion, not to be disturbed without showing of prejudice.

Allowance of trial amendments to pleadings rests in sound discretion of court, and ruling should not be disturbed on appeal in absence of showing that prejudice resulted therefrom to extent that party aggrieved was deprived of substantial right or deprived of fair trial.

3. Bankruptcy $\S$ 279—Trustee in bankruptcy may pursue bankrupt's property held by third persons in fraud of creditors.

Trustee in bankruptcy has right to pursue property of bankrupt claimed to be held by third persons in fraud of creditors.

4. Limitation of actions $\S$ 103(2)—Limitation of action to recover stock held in trust did not commence until repudiation of trust.

Action by trustee in bankruptcy to establish title to stock held by third person under agreement to hold stock in trust for bankrupt held based on express trust, and against which statute of limitations did not commence to run until trust was repudiated.

5. Limitation of actions $\S$ 103(3)—Trust in stock held by pledgee in trust for bankrupt held not repudiated until pledgee's answer to action by trustee in bankruptcy to recover stock.

In action by trustee in bankruptcy to establish title to stock pledged to defendant and sold to pledgee under agreement that pledgee was to hold stock in trust for bankrupt, repudiation of trust first took place when pledgee filed answer denying allegations of complaint and alleging limitations, and hence action was not barred by statute of limitations commencing on repudiation of trust.

6. Judgment $\S$ 256(2)—Judgment restoring stock to trustee in bankruptcy held too broad, under findings that pledge by bankrupt was bona fide and should be modified to prohibit recovery until debt was paid.

In action by trustee in bankruptcy to establish express trust in stock for bankrupt and recover stock, judgment restoring stock to trustee absolutely held too far-reaching under findings that transaction for pledge and sale of stock up to time of sale was bona fide, but that sale was made with secret agreement that pledgee was to hold stock in trust for bankrupt, and hence judgment must be modified to deny recovery of possession of stock until debt was paid.

7. Limitation of actions $\S$ 167(1)—Pledgee can retain property until debt is paid, though debt is barred by limitations.

Pledgee has right to retain possession of pledged property until debt for which it was given as security is paid, and pledgee cannot be required to surrender property, though debt is barred by statute of limitations and no affirmative action can be taken to enforce it.

PER CURIAM.

Upon further consideration of the above-entitled cause, we are satisfied that the opinion first rendered therein by the learned District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, written by Mr. Justice pro tem. Tuttle, expresses the views of this court; therefore said opinion then so rendered, as follows, is now hereby adopted as the opinion of this court herein:

This is an action brought by plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of J. C. Rice, a bankrupt, to secure an adjudication of the ownership and title to certain property, and to establish the interest of plaintiff, as trustee, in the same, and for an accounting and recovery of money. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendants J. C. Rice Company and M. Y. Wolf now appeal from the same, and also from the order denying motion for new trial and the order denying the motion to vacate and set aside the judgment and render judgment in favor of defendants.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff is the trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of J. C. Rice, a bankrupt debtor; that at the time of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy said J. C. Rice was the owner of an undivided one-half interest in certain lands situate in the county of San Diego, known as the "Lincoln Acres"; that heretofore the said J. C. Rice, acting in the name of the defendant J. C. Rice Company, entered into an agreement with defendant Rae Investment Company whereby said defendant and said Rice became owners in common of the tract of land hereinbefore described, taking the title thereto in the name of defendant Rae Investment Company; that subsequent thereto said Rice and said defendant Rae Investment Company entered into an agreement with said defendant R. E. Harrison Company under and by virtue of the terms of which said R. E. Harrison Company became the selling agents for the defendants Rae Investment Company and the said J. C. Rice in the sale of said tracts of land hereinbefore described; that a large number of parcels of land have been sold and the contracts for the purchase of the same have been placed with the defendant Union Trust Company for the purpose of collection; that the defendant Union Trust Company has collected a large amount of money upon said contracts, as plaintiff is informed and believes, one-half of which is the property of the said bankrupt; that the said R. E. Harrison Company has entered into said contracts under its own name, but in fact as and for the defendants Rae Investment Company and the said J. C. Rice; that the plaintiff is informed and believes, and on such information and belief alleges, that said J. C. Rice Company, a corporation, was organized by the said J. C. Rice as a vehicle through which to transact business and conceal his assets from his creditors, and that ever since its organization said J. C. Rice has used said corporation for that purpose, and that ever since its organization said J. C. Rice has been and now is the sole owner of the said J. C. Rice Company and all of its assets, and that the said J. C. Rice Company is in fact and always has been J. C. Rice, the bankrupt debtor; that prior to the commencement of this action the said court of bankruptcy duly made and filed its order in said bankruptcy proceedings, authorizing and directing plaintiff to commence and prosecute this action. On information and belief plaintiff alleges that said defendant M. Y. Wolf claims to own 247 shares of the capital stock of said J. C. Rice Company, being all of the capital stock of said company except 3 shares, and that the claim of the said M. Y. Wolf to said stock is without any right whatever, and that in truth and in fact the said J. C. Rice, the bankrupt debtor, was the owner of all of the capital stock of the said J. C. Rice Company at the time of the filing of his petition in bankruptcy.

At the trial of the action an amended complaint, to conform to the proof, was filed under order of court. The allegations of this amended complaint are similar to those in the original, except that certain other lands are added. The following additional allegations appear: That certain other parcels of real property stand on the records in the name of defendant J. C. Rice Company, but that they were, at the time the bankruptcy petition was filed, owned by said J. C. Rice; that on November 21, 1918, and at a time when J. C. Rice was insolvent, he was the owner of all the stock of defendant J. C. Rice Company, to wit, 250 shares; that for the purpose of hindering, defrauding, and delaying his creditors, he (J. C. Rice) executed and delivered to defendant Wolf a promissory note for $21,458.79, and as security therefor pretended to pledge to said Wolf 247 shares of said stock; that on September 9, 1919, said Wolf made a pretended sale of said stock to himself, and credited a payment of $15,000 on said note; that prior to said sale a creditor of said Rice levied an execution on said stock, and that said pretended sale was made to assist said Rice in concealing his assets from his creditors, and that said sale was made with the secret understanding that it was to be held in trust by said Wolf, and that said Wolf now holds the same in trust for plaintiff as trustee in bankruptcy.

Appellants each filed separate answers, which are practically the same. They deny the essential allegations of the complaint. In addition, the statute of limitations is pleaded.

As the entire appeal revolves around the sale of said stock, we quote, in part, the finding of the court upon this issue: "That on the 21st day of November, 1918, the said J. C. Rice was indebted to defendant M. Y. Wolf in the sum of $21,458.79, and that on said 21st day of November, 1918, the said J. C. Rice did in consideration of said indebtedness sign, execute, and deliver to said defendant M. Y. Wolf his certain promissory note for the sum of $21,458.79, payable to the order of defendant M. Y. Wolf, five years after its date, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. (7%) per annum, payable at maturity, and said J. C. Rice did at said time pledge and deliver to said M. Y. Wolf 247 shares of the capital stock of said J. C. Rice Company, and also stock in other companies; among the stock so pledged being stock of the Central Mortgage & Investment Company, as collateral security for the payment of said note; that said note so signed, executed and delivered by said J. C. Rice to M. Y. Wolf, and delivery of the said 247 shares of the capital stock of said J. C. Rice Company and stock of the other corporations to said M. Y. Wolf, as security for the payment of said $21,458.79 note, was a bona fide transaction and made in good faith on the part of said J. C. Rice and M. Y. Wolf, and for valuable consideration. That the value of said stock so pledged was fixed in said note by said J. C. Rice and said Wolf in said note at the sum of $75,000.00. That said alleged pledgee's sale of said 247 shares of the stock of said J. C. Rice Company by the said M. Y. Wolf to himself on said 9th day of September, 1919, was made with the secret understanding and agreement between said J. C. Rice and said M. Y. Wolf that said M. Y. Wolf would hold said stock in trust for said J. C. Rice, and that said M. Y. Wolf does now hold said stock in trust for said plaintiff as trustee in bankruptcy of said J. C. Rice and that the claim of said M. Y. Wolf to said stock of said J. C. Rice Company is without any right whatever as against this plaintiff." The judgment does not mention the stock, but it is decreed that "plaintiff, as such trustee in bankruptcy, is the owner of said J. C. Rice Company, a corporation, and all its assets and property of every kind and nature." This is treated and construed by all the parties as an adjudication that plaintiff, as trustee, is the owner of said shares of stock, and we will follow that construction.

[1-3] It is contended by appellants that the court erred in allowing said trial amendment to the complaint, for the reason that said amendment changes the cause of action. When the case was called for trial, respondent admitted that no cause of action was stated against defendant M. Y. Wolf, and that he was only referred to in the caption and prayer of the complaint. Thereafter, and during the trial, permission was granted to file the amended complaint to conform to proof, referred to, supra. It is the position of appellant, with reference to said stock, that the amended complaint states a cause of action to set aside the sale of said stock. If this were true, it would no doubt be the addition of a new cause of action. As we view the pleading, the action was commenced by the trustee to establish a secret trust for the benefit of the bankrupt, and to have the title to said stock vested in said trustee. If, in fact, Rice and Wolf had a secret understanding that the latter was to hold the stock as his own, the effect of this was to work a deception upon the creditors, and this would be true whether a deception was intended or not. The pleading of fraud, therefore, does not alter the essential characteristics of the action, which was, in effect, for the purpose of impressing a trust upon the stock in the hands of Wolf.

This precise point was before the court in the case of Ury v. Van Every, 181 Cal. 604, 188 P. 985, and it was there so held. The matter of the allowance of trial amendment to the pleadings rests in the sound discretion of the court, and such ruling should not be disturbed upon appeal in the absence of a showing that prejudice resulted therefrom to the extent that the party aggrieved was deprived of a substantial right or placed in a position where it may be said that he was deprived of a fair trial. No such showing is here made. If defendants were faced with a new issue upon which they were unprepared, they had the right to move for a continuance upon that ground. Having made no such motion, they are in no position to complain. The record shows that the attorney for defendant stated in open court he did not wish a continuance when the matter was suggested. For these reasons we hold that the point is without merit. It is claimed that the trustee in bankruptcy had no authority to bring such an action. There is no merit in this contention. Ury v. Van Every, supra. The right of a trustee, under such circumstances, to pursue the property of the bankrupt is unquestioned. 7 Cal. Juris. 118.

[4, 5] The next question raised by appellants is that of the statute of limitations. It is claimed that the action is one to set aside the sale upon the ground of fraud; that the three-year limitation applies. We have pointed out that the cause of action is one to establish a trust, so far as the stock is concerned. The court found that the stock was sold under an agreement that defendant was to hold the same in trust for the bankrupt, Rice. This was an express trust, and the statute of limitations did not commence to run until the same was repudiated by the trustee. Lezinsky v. Mason Malt Co., 185 Cal. 240, 196 P. 884. The repudiation first took place in the instant case when defendant Wolf filed his answer. The action, therefore, was commenced within the time provided by law.

It is contended that the findings upon the issues relating to the execution of the note, the pledging of the stock, and the sale of said stock are in favor of appellants, and that they should have judgment upon such findings. This question presents some unique features. It will be observed that the court found that the whole transaction up to the time of the sale under the pledge was bona fide, but that the sale was made with the secret understanding that Wolf was to hold the stock in trust for the bankrupt, Rice. The argument of appellants is that the court having found that the steps leading up to the sale were valid, it must necessarily follow that the sale was in good faith, and that the finding that the sale was made with a secret understanding, creating a trust, must be disregarded. As authority, they refer to the case of Pierce v. Pierce, 16 Cal. App. 375, 117 P. 580. In that case the trial court upheld a mortgage as executed in good faith, but set aside a foreclosure sale upon the ground of fraud. The judgment was reversed upon the ground that there was no evidence to show any attempt to conceal property, and no agreement between the parties to that effect, and no evidence that any creditor of the mortgagor was making any demands upon him at the time of said sale. The case turned upon the sufficiency of evidence, and not upon the doctrine that a sale under such circumstances cannot be annulled upon sufficient evidence.

[6, 7] A more serious question arises in this case as to the extent that a judgment can go under these findings. The judgment, in effect, restores the stock to the trustee, absolutely, and yet it is found that the execution of the note and the pledge were proceedings in good faith; hence, the pledge was valid. The effect of the findings is to leave the stock in the hands of the pledgee, while the trustee in bankruptcy is the legal owner thereof. It is at once apparent that the judgment is too far-reaching in its terms, and should be modified to conform to the findings. No recovery of possession of the said shares of stock could be had until the debt was paid. "Unless otherwise agreed, a pledgee has a right to retain possession of pledged property until the debt or obligation for which it was given as security is paid. He is precisely in the position occupied by a mortgagee in possession, and cannot be required to surrender the property until the debt is satisfied, even though it is barred by the statute of limitations, and no affirmative action can be taken to enforce it." 21 Cal. Juris. 330.

The sufficiency of the findings is attacked in many particulars. The "business" ventures of the bankrupt are spread over hundreds of pages of the transcript. His schedule of indebtedness was about $360,000. His assets were listed at $125, but claimed as exempt. At the time of the execution of said note to Wolf, his creditors were legion. Many of these were judgment creditors. Numerous corporations were organized by him, and the stock was traded back and forth. His gyrations in a corporate way are almost impossible to follow. Always, however, he was the whole corporation; the matter of control by a directorate being but a fiction. After the "sale" of said stock under the pledge, he continued just as he always did in the conduct of the corporation. The purported owner of the stock, for a period of some five years, shows by his testimony that he did not know what was going on, so far as the affairs of the corporation in which he held all the stock were concerned. We are satisfied that there is ample evidence in the record to support the findings.

The judgment is modified so that paragraph 4 thereof will read as follows: "4. That plaintiff as such trustee in bankruptcy is the owner of said J. C. Rice Company, a corporation, and of all of its assets and property of every kind and nature whatsoever, provided, however, that it is hereby adjudged that the said 247 shares of stock are subject to a pledge as security for the payment of the promissory note for $21,458.79, executed by J. C. Rice to defendant M. Y. Wolf."

As so modified, the judgment is affirmed; appellants to recover their costs herein.

SEAWELL, J.

I dissent. The record presents as unusual case. J. C. Rice, the bankrupt, at the time of and for many years prior to filing his petition in bankruptcy, had been very actively engaged in the business of buying, selling, trading, and exchanging real property and dealing in stocks and bonds in the city and suburban districts of San Diego. The J. C. Rice Company was organized through the efforts of Mr. Rice as successor of the Rice-Landswick Company about February 1, 1915. All of the property owned by the Central Mortgage & Investment Company and the Rice-Landswick Company was absorbed by the J. C. Rice Company, whereupon said corporations ceased to function. Stock in the J. C. Rice Company was issued to various parties who held claims against corporations of which J. C. Rice was the owner. The Rice-Landswick Company, of which Rice was the principal stockholder, became insolvent. The capital stock issued by the J. C. Rice Company, consisting of 250 shares, was, excepting two or three shares, gradually acquired by J. C. Rice, although but one share stood upon the books of the corporation in his name. Rice, Wolf, and R. E. Harrison had been mutually interested in several other corporations and were associated in speculative real estate and stock investments. Wolf's business experience and knowledge of values in San Diego real property and stocks was very limited compared with the long experience of Rice and Harrison, who seemed to be men possessed of much daring, drive, and business energy. Rice seemed to be the ruling character. Harrison had known Rice from childhood, and no doubt acceded to his judgment in important business transactions. Wolf had not resided nearly so long in San Diego as either Rice or Harrison, and was nothing like as resourceful as either. He had not had the experience of either in the organization of corporations for business convenience or as holding concerns, nor did he seem to possess the initiative or business acumen of either of the other two. The relationship that existed between the three during Rice's rise and fall in business circles cannot be definitely determined, but that a relationship or understanding existed there can be no doubt. Rice, who had long been active in putting over large deals, was, and it seems during his long business career had been, constantly pressed for ready money, and his obligations far exceeded his ability to pay. His liabilities at the time of filing his petition in bankruptcy approximated $360,000, with practically no assets. His insolvency had existed for many years before he executed the Wolf note, dated November 21, 1918, in the sum of $21,458.79, payable five years after its date, to secure a pre-existing indebtedness, and gave said 247 shares of the J. C. Rice Company's stock, and some other stocks, as security for its payment. The court having upheld the bona fides of the pre-existing indebtedness and having held that the sale of the stock given as collateral to secure the same, made in compliance with the terms of the pledge, was void so far as it affected the right of the trustee in bankruptcy to apply the property described as standing in the name of the J. C. Rice Company and others, to the payment of the debts of the bankrupt, J. C. Rice, presents, in the view of appellants, an irreconcilable conflict, in that, if the said promissory note was given for a valuable consideration and the sale of said security was made in accordance with the provisions of said pledge, the purchaser of said stocks, which constituted practically the entire stock issue of said corporations, was, it is argued, entitled to have the real and personal property belonging to the J. C. Rice Company preserved as assets of said corporation. On the other hand, it is the claim of plaintiff that, while said sale had the semblance of a bona fide transaction, it was nevertheless a mere sham proceeding, another step taken in furtherance of a well-laid plan on the part of J. C. Rice, assisted by M. Y. Wolf, to conceal his assets from his creditors by and through corporation manipulations to his ultimate gain. The J. C. Rice Company was in fact a one-man corporation during its entire existence. The same policy was in vogue in every allied corporation in which Rice was interested. While they were corporations in name and forms of law, they were but intermediaries which responded obsequiously to the will of the owner, without a very strict regard for the observance of laws prescribing the methods by which corporations may transact business.

The record of J. C. Rice's activities in the J. C. Rice Company dates from the organization of said corporation, February 1, 1915, and shows him to have been the sole and absolutely dominant figure in the corporation from the first, even when he appeared upon the books as the owner of but one share of stock. He and Harrison, the latter also the owner of one share of stock, were directors, while Rice became the president and manager. We pass from the earlier stage of the corporation's existence to the pledging and sale of Rice's 247 shares of stock to Wolf as security for a pre-existing indebtedness at a time when Rice was known to be insolvent. The court found that the sale was collusive and it was not intended thereby to vest title to said stock in Wolf, but to give the appearance that the entire stock issue of 247 shares, save one or two shares, one of which was owned by Harrison, had passed out of Rice to Wolf, which made Wolf the owner of the corporation, which was the ostensible owner of much of the real and personal property in suit.

The rationale of the situation argues strongly in support of the court's finding that the sale was one only in form and was given the appearance of good faith with the fraudulent purpose of protecting Rice's property against the claims of his numerous creditors, a plan to which Wolf had wittingly lent himself. While the indebtedness secured by the note was found by the court to have been lawfully incurred, there may be seen, in the light of the most unusual transactions between Rice and Wolf, a design on the part of both to give to a sham transaction a legal aspect, thereby enabling them to profit to the detriment of creditors, by deceitful and unfair methods. If Wolf was a party to such a scheme as the court found he was, the law will not concern itself with the burden of releasing him from the consequences of his voluntary act. The question for this court's determination is whether the evidence is sufficient to sustain the court's finding that there was fraudulent participation in such a plan by Wolf. We think the evidence was sufficient to sustain the express and implied finding of the court upon that issue.

The methods of doing business, as irregular as they appear to have been, continued after said sale precisely as they had existed before. The management of the corporation remained under the sole direction of Mr. Rice. He signed all checks without counter signature; received all moneys and made deposits of the same; made entries on the stubs and deposit slips; negotiated purchases and sales of real and personal property amounting in one instance to the sum of $50,000 and aggregating a large amount; and pledged the corporation's chattels for moneys borrowed on his personal account. Wolf, who claims to have been the owner of all of the stock except one share owned by Rice and one owned by Harrison, by virtue of said sale, took no part in the business transactions of the corporation or its business policy, and was rarely, if ever, consulted on any matter, great or small, and in fact was not aware of the volume of business carried on by Rice, who acted without restraint or approval of any superior governing body. His admission is that only a part of the 93,011 shares of the stock of the Castle Range Mining Company, which were included in the J. C. Rice Company stock pledge, were ever delivered to Mr. Wolf. Wolf exercised no authority whatsoever in the management of the corporation, and manifested a startling lack of acquaintance with the business of the corporation and its acquisition of the real property described in the complaint.

More than five years elapsed from the day he became the purchaser of said stock, September 9, 1919, to the day he became even a director of said corporation, to wit, February 16, 1925. This was the day before Rice filed his petition in bankruptcy. On that day Mr. Wolf was elected president of the corporation, vice J. C. Rice, resigned, and Rice, ostensibly the owner of but one share of stock, was thereupon elected vice president. On January 3, 1920, in lieu of the powers that were vested in Rice, its president since said corporation began to function, directors J. C. Rice and R. E. Harrison, each the owner of one share of stock, met pursuant to call—Wolf, the owner of 247 or 248 shares, being absent—and passed the following resolution conferring upon Rice plenary powers, under which resolution the business of the corporation was thereafter conducted:

"Be it, and it is hereby resolved that the president or the vice-president of this corporation be, and each of them is, hereby authorized to borrow on behalf of and in the name of this corporation any and all sums of money necessary for carrying on the business of the corporation, or incidental to the business of the corporation, and make any and all sales, exchanges, or other manner of disposition of the real and personal property of the corporation, except the business and franchise of the corporation as a whole, and enter into any and all agreements for the securing of such loans or the giving of security therefor, or the selling, exchanging or disposition of said real or personal property, and that in the name of, and on behalf of, this corporation, said president or vice-president execute and deliver such notes, mortgages, trust deeds, deeds, agreements, assignments or other instruments as may be proper to complete such transactions, and that the secretary of this corporation attest the same with his signature and the corporate seal of this corporation, and that so far as third parties are concerned, any instrument of the nature above described executed in the name of this corporation, by its president or vice-president and attested by its secretary with the corporate seal affixed shall be conclusive in favor of such third persons that the act done or agreed to be done has been fully authorized by this corporation."

The only person who assumed any authority under the foregoing resolution was Rice. The only meeting of the directors that Wolf ever attended was the one at which he became a director and president, held on the day before Rice filed his petition in bankruptcy. He assumed no authority, and the business continued to be conducted by Rice as it always had been conducted by him. There was nothing about Wolf's conduct to suggest to the business public in the smallest way that he had any authority in the premises. The presumption (section 1963, Code Civ. Proc.) that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns cannot, in the absence of substantial rebuttal evidence, be wholly ignored. The books of the corporation, so far as furnishing a record of the business, are negligible. The stock was carried on the books of the corporation from the first in the names of persons other than J. C. Rice. During all the period covered from and before the execution of the Wolf promissory note, November 21, 1918, to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, February 17, 1925, Rice was heavily in debt and had suffered several judgments to be taken against him. His financial embarrassment must have been, and we understand was, known by Wolf.

We think there is ample support in the evidence for the court's finding that said corporation was used as a vehicle by Rice for the purpose of concealing his assets from his creditors. That he was the master of its destinies at all times is not to be doubted. A court of equity will look through the form of a corporation to ascertain its actual purpose and intent. If the purpose and intent are bad, its corporate entity will be no cover for wrong, fraud, or bad faith. "Where an individual is the owner of all the corporate capital stock and uses the corporation merely as an instrumentality through which he transacts business, the separate entities will be disregarded when necessary to prevent fraud and to protect the rights of third persons." Clark v. Millsap, 197 Cal. 765, 242 P. 918, 924; Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, 202 P. 673; Wenban Estate, Inc., v. Hewlett, 193 Cal. 675, 227 P. 723. When such a situation exists, the law will hold such corporation obligated for the acts of the sole owner of the corporation to the same extent and just as he would be bound in the absence of the existence of the corporation. Wenban Estate, Inc., v. Hewlett, supra.

Sufficient reasons are to be found in the record of the instant case, as there were in Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481-488, 202 P. 673, to sustain the court's finding that the J. C. Rice Company, corporation, was but the alter ego of said J. C. Rice. Some emphasis is given to the circumstance that all of the stock owned by Rice—which was practically all of the stock issued by said corporation—was, on the day following its sale under the pledge, to wit, September 10, 1919, entered upon the books of the corporation in the name of Wolf. In passing, it may be said that the promptness in making this entry is in conspicuous contrast with the general course of omission to make entries in other important business transactions. In the light of the facts and circumstances of this case, it is not strange that the chancellor did not accept the incredible contention of appellants that by said sale it was intended that Wolf should become and remain the dormant owner of said corporation for a period of approximately six years and then only assert proprietorship in anticipation of a move on the part of the bankruptcy court to apply the property that stood in the corporation's name to Rice's indebtedness.

It is claimed by Wolf that some time after he purchased the stock of the corporation he employed Rice to continue the business as he had theretofore conducted it at an agreed salary of $2,000 per year. In corroboration of this claim of Wolf, it is shown that Rice, some two or three months after said alleged employment began, drew his entire annual salary. This item of advancement, as was the case in other withdrawals of moneys made by Mr. Rice, naturally could not be explained by Mr. Wolf, who had no actual knowledge as to the affairs of the corporation. Appellants rest their contentions mainly upon the finding of the court as to the bona fides of Rice's indebtedness to Wolf and the pledging of the shares of stock as security therefor and the finding that the law's forms had been regularly pursued in the sale. It is their contention that there exists an irreconcilable conflict between the findings last mentioned and the finding that said sale was collusive between Wolf and Rice and was made with the secret understanding that Wolf was to be the purchaser of said stock and was to hold the same for the benefit of Rice and said sale was made with the intent to aid and assist said Rice in fraudulently concealing his assets from his creditors. It will be remembered that Wolf was the only bidder at said sale; the amount of his bid being $15,000 for stocks appraised by himself and Rice at $75,000 less than a year prior to the sale, and, having sold said stocks to himself, credited Rice's note with the amount of the purchase price, to wit, $15,000.

The theory upon which the case was tried and decided was that it was not intended by the sale of stock to transfer the title of the property standing in the name of the corporation to Wolf, but that it was a mere sham proceeding designed to better carry out the plan of deception as to the true owner of the property standing in the name of the corporation. We have reviewed the evidence in the case, and find that there is an abundance of evidence to justify such a conclusion. Going no further back than the making of the promissory note and from there following the various transactions of the parties inter se, and with third persons down to the day the petition in insolvency was filed, and since, a most unusual course of conduct is presented.

It is such a wide departure from the natural and usual course of action as to create more than a mere suspicion in the mind of the chancellor as to the ulterior purposes of the actors. In such circumstances the conduct and probable motives of the persons who are responsible for bringing about an equivocal situation, and who attempt to unduly profit at a cost to innocent persons, should be carefully scrutinized by the chancellor, in view of the advantage sought to be taken of such a situation.

This case was twice considered by the District Court of Appeal, Tuttle, Justice pro tempore, writing the opinion in each instance. Upon the first consideration, paragraph 4 of the judgment of the trial court was modified to read as follows: "That plaintiff as such trustee in bankruptcy is the owner of said J. C. Rice Company, a corporation, and of all of its assets and property of every kind and nature whatsoever, provided, however, that it is hereby adjudged that the said 247 shares of stock are subject to a pledge as security for the payment of the promissory note for $21,458.79, executed by J. C. Rice to defendant W. Y. Wolf."

Upon the second consideration the judgment was affirmed without modification. Aside from certain injunctive relief, the prayer of the amended complaint is that the trustee in bankruptcy be adjudged the owner in trust of all property standing in the name of the J. C. Rice Company, or in which said company may have an interest, and all property standing in the name of said company or held in trust for said J. C. Rice. The court was not asked to make any decree as to the ownership of the stock. It is true that the court did, nevertheless, find that M. Y. Wolf held said stock in trust for said J. C. Rice and that "said M. Y. Wolf does now hold said stock in trust for said plaintiff as trustee in bankruptcy of said J. C. Rice, and that the claim of said M. Y. Wolf to said stock of said J. C. Rice Company is without any right whatever as against this plaintiff." (Italics supplied.) This finding, of doubtful meaning, probably was intended to mean that the sale was a mere pretense, and it did not convey to Wolf a real interest in any property standing in the corporate name. The judgment does not decree that the trustee has any right or claim in or to said pledged stocks. It describes the property in suit, and holds that plaintiff as trustee in bankruptcy is the owner of the J. C. Rice Company and all of its assets, and quiets the title to said described property as against the claims of M. Y. Wolf by reason of said sale. The sale was held to be fraudulent and collusive, and was therefore not effective to accomplish the fraudulent purpose, and, as a sequence, the title of said property remained in the corporation as the alter ego of Rice. Such is the effect of the judgment.

Appellants' theory is that, the court having found that the sale of the stock was conducted in the manner and according to the forms of law, the trial court was concluded from finding that said sale was a part of a plan devised by Rice and Wolf to mislead and deceive the creditors of Rice as to the real owners of the property standing in the corporation's name. If the plan and purpose was as found by the trial court, there was no sale of said stocks in the sense that title to said property became vested in Wolf, inasmuch as he was a party to the fraudulent transaction. In all of the history of the transaction, whether in matters now claimed to be corporate or individual, Wolf dealt with but one person, Rice.

That a legal remedy may be wrongfully used as an instrumentality of oppression or in the commission of a fraud, there is no doubt, and it is equally clear that when so used a court of equity will extend its hand in assistance to the person sought to be oppressed or defrauded by the attempted wrongful diversion. The distinctive office of equity is to grant relief in cases wherein by reason of the inflexibility of the law none would be afforded. This is an equity case, and I am of the view, unless equity is to be honored only in theory and not in practice, that appellant Wolf should be held to have forfeited his so-called lien by reason of aiding and assisting Rice through a series of years in conducting the transactions herein related.

Appellants have cited numerous cases wherein the statutes of limitations have been held to bar actions, and have sought to bring the instant case within the rule as therein announced. They also call to our attention that a debtor may in certain circumstances prefer one creditor to the exclusion of others. We need not pause to consider the principles announced in those cases which are decided upon an entirely different state of facts. As to the three years' bar of the statute urged by appellants, we may say in passing that we would hesitate to hold, in view of the dual and covert manner in which Mr. Rice conducted the business of himself and the corporation, interlinked and intermixed as it is, continuing throughout a series of years, that the persons with whom he had business transactions should have made discovery of the fraudulent purpose charged within the prescribed limits of the statute, and, having failed to commence suits within that period, their causes were barred. In our view of the case, that question was not a controlling issue.

Appellants have laid much emphasis upon two letters written by Mr. Wolf to Mr. Rice, the first of which is dated August 6, 1919, demanding additional security for Rice's indebtedness to him and threatening to take steps to protect the same if additional security was not forthcoming. The second, dated September 3, 1919, notified Rice that, inasmuch as he had failed to furnish additional security, he would proceed to sell said stocks at public auction. The entire situation as recorded within the six-year period following those letters was before the trial court, and, upon weighing the case as made against such evidentiary value as the letters contained the trial court found that at least the subsequent relations that existed between Wolf and Rice had for their object the concealment of the latter's property from his creditors. Where one entangles himself in the meshes of a transaction designed to deceive others, equity will not exert itself in his behalf.

It is not necessary in this proceeding to pass upon the validity of any claim Wolf may assert against the bankrupt's estate as a creditor on account of any undischarged indebtedness arising out of the note transaction. I am of the opinion, however, that the property described in the judgment is subject to the payment of Rice's indebtedness.

The decision of the District Court of Appeal upon rehearing, affirming the judgment of the trial court without modification, is, in my view, the decision which should stand.

PEOPLE v. OSAKI et al.

Cr. 3270.

Supreme Court of California.

March 26, 1930.

Petition for Rehearing Withdrawn April 18, 1930.

1. Aliens ⇨7 — Common law — Real property — Acquisition.

At common law, alien could not acquire real property by operation of law, but he could take by purchase.

2. Aliens ⇨10 — Constitutional law ⇨311 — Criminal prosecution — Citizenship — Burden of proof — Constitutionality of statute.

Law providing negative allegation of indictment requires defendants to prove citizenship held not denial of due process (Const. U. S. Amend. 14; Const. art. 1, § 13; Code Civ. Proc. § 1983, as added by St. 1927, p. 434; Alien Land Law, §§ 9a, 9b, as added by St. 1927, p. 881).

3. Conspiracy ⇨44½ — Criminal prosecution — Citizenship — Eligibility — Burden of proof.

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate Alien Land Act, allegations that defendant was alien not eligible to citizenship are taken as true, absent contrary proof (Alien Land Act 1921, as amended).

Under the Alien Land Act (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020, and St. 1927, p. 880), the state was required to prove that accused was a member of a race ineligible to citizenship, and that he had acquired real property and interest therein.

4. Constitutional law ⇨199 — Criminal prosecution — Alien Land Law — Ex post facto laws.

In prosecution for conspiracy to violate Alien Land Law, contention that counts rested on ex post facto laws because offenses were committed before amendment held without merit (Alien Land Act 1921, as amended).

The amendments by St. 1927, p. 880, of the Alien Land Act (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii), did not make any act committed prior thereto a crime which was otherwise innocent, nor aggravate the crime, nor impose greater punishment, nor alter the legal rules of evidence.

5. Criminal law ⇨1173(2) — Alien Land Act — Burden of proof — Failure to instruct — Prejudicial error.

Failure to instruct people must prove defendant member of alien race ineligible to citizenship held not prejudicial (Alien Land Act 1921, as amended).

The prosecution was for conspiracy to violate the Alien Land Act (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020, and St. 1927, p. 880). The record showed that the case was tried on the theory that defendant was of alien ineligible blood.

6. Criminal law ⇨1163(4) — Instruction — Erroneous fact statement — Presumptions on appeal.

If neither court nor counsel noticed erroneous fact statement in instruction, it will not be presumed jury was more alert.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

K. Osaki and K. Yoshioka were convicted of conspiracy to violate the Alien Land Law, and they appeal.

Affirmed.

Superseding opinions, 278 P. 252, 934.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, and Lloyd E. Hewitt, of Yuba City, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank English and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

SEAWELL, J.

The defendants were jointly convicted upon five separate counts of an indictment containing six counts filed in the superior court of the county of Sutter, charging them with the crime of conspiring to violate the Alien Land Act of the state. St. 1921, p. lxxxiii; amended by St. 1923, p. 1020; St. 1927, pp. 880, 881.

The indictment charged that K. Yoshioka, a native of the Hawaiian Islands, but admittedly of Japanese lineage, and K. Osaki, an alleged alien not eligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States, conspired together with the object and to the end that said ineligible alien, Osaki, should have an interest in and a beneficial use of the parcels of land described in said several counts and should possess, enjoy, use, cultivate, and occupy said real property in a manner and to an extent and for purposes otherwise than prescribed by any treaty existing between the government of the United States and the nation of which said alien was a citizen or subject, and pursuant to said conspiracy said alien, Osaki, did acquire, possess, enjoy, use, cultivate, and occupy said described real property in a manner and for purposes otherwise than prescribed by any treaty existing between the United States of America and the nation and country of which a said alien, K. Osaki, was a citizen and subject. The fifth count of said indictment was dismissed. The lands described in the several counts of the indictment are agricultural lands, and were possessed and occupied by defendants for agricultural uses.

[1, 2] The constitutionality of the amendment of the Alien Land Act approved May 16, 1927 (St. 1927, p. 880), and section 1983, Code of Civil Procedure, as added in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 434), are challenged by the appellants upon several grounds, mainly that the alienage of Osaki, being an essential element of the offense charged—a part of the corpus delicti—his ineligibility must be proved by the prosecution and that burden cannot be shifted to the defendant by force of a mere negative allegation of the indictment to the effect that the defendant is an ineligible alien, and an attempt to do so must fail as being in conflict with the due process clauses of section 13, article 1, of the state Constitution and the 14th amendment to the federal Constitution.

Said amendments of the Alien Land Act and Code section brought into question by appellants provide:

"Section 1. A new section to be known as section 9a is hereby added to the act cited in the title thereof and to read as follows:

"Section 9a. In any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, by the State of California, or the people thereof, under any of the provisions of this act, when the proof introduced by the state, or the people thereof, establishes the acquisition, possession, enjoyment, use, cultivation, occupation, or transferring of real property or any interest therein, or the having in whole or in part the beneficial use thereof by any defendant, or any of such fact, and the complaint, indictment or information alleges the alienage and ineligibility to United States citizenship of such defendant, the burden of proving citizenship or eligibility to citizenship shall thereupon devolve upon such defendant.

"Section 2. A new section, to be known as section 9b, is hereby added to said act and to read as follows:

"Section 9b. In any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, by the State of California, or the people thereof, under any of the provisions of this act, when the complaint, indictment or information, alleges the alienage and ineligibility to United States citizenship of any defendant, proof by the state, or the people thereof, of the acquisition, possession, enjoyment, use, cultivation, occupation or transferring of real property or any interest therein, or the having in whole or in part of the beneficial use thereof by such defendant, or of any such facts, and in addition proof that such defendant is a member of a race ineligible to citizenship under the naturalization laws of the United States, shall create a prima facie presumption of the ineligibility to citizenship of such defendant, and the burden of proving citizenship or eligibility to citizenship as a defense to any such action or proceeding shall thereupon devolve upon such defendant.

"The Legislature hereby declares that its purpose in adopting this section is not to modify, limit, or affect in any manner the provisions of section 9a of this act." St. 1927, p. 880.

Section 1983, Code of Civil Procedure, as added in 1927, is as follows:

"Whenever in any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, brought by, or in the name of, the state or the people thereof, or by or in the name of any political subdivision or agency of the state, or by any public board or officer on behalf of any thereof, to enforce any law which denies any right, privilege or license to any person not a citizen of the United States, or not eligible to become such citizen, or to a person not a citizen or resident of this state, and whenever in any action or proceeding in which the state or any political subdivision or agency thereof, or any public board or officer acting on behalf thereof, is or becomes a party, it is alleged in the pleading therein filed on behalf of the state, the people thereof, political subdivision or agency, or of such board or officer, that such right, privilege or license has been exercised by a person not a citizen of the United States, or not eligible to become such citizen, or by a person not a citizen or resident of this state, as the case may be, the burden shall be upon the party for or on whose behalf such pleading was filed to establish the fact that such right, privilege or license was exercised by the person alleged to have exercised the same, and upon such fact being so established the burden shall be upon such person, or upon any person, firm or corporation claiming under or through the exercise of such right, privilege, or license, to establish the fact that the person alleged to have exercised such right, privilege or license was, at the time of so exercising the same, a citizen of the United States, or eligible to become such citizen, or was a citizen or resident of this state, as the case may require, and was at said time legally entitled to exercise such right, privilege or license." St. 1927, p. 434.

The proofs made at the trial fully sustain the implied finding of the jury that the defendant Osaki, in common with his codefendant Yoshioka, had an interest in and enjoyed a beneficial use of said described parcels of land and occupied the same in a manner and to an extent and for purposes otherwise than prescribed by any treaty existing between this country and the empire of Japan.

No evidence was offered by either side pointedly directed to the citizenship of said alleged lien. If the Alien Land Acts, which cast upon said alleged alien the burden of proving his citizenship or eligibility to citizenship under the naturalization laws of this country as a prerequisite to the enjoyment of the rights which the evidence shows he undoubtedly exercised, are not in conflict with the due process provisions of the state and federal Constitutions, the judgments of conviction must stand.

Said Osaki gave testimony in his own behalf with the assistance of an interpreter of the Japanese language, but gave no evidence as to the country of his nativity. His associates were persons of the Japanese race. His racial appearance and characteristics were before the jury and trial judge. That he was a member of the Japanese race appears to have been conceded from the following questions propounded to witnesses on cross-examination by his counsel, and the answers received thereto without objection or comment:

"Q. You knew, of course, he [Osaki] was a Japanese when you did so [rented cabins for housing purposes]? A. Yes, I knew he was a Japanese." * * *

"Q. So far as Japanese were concerned, which ones did you meet there at that time? A. Osaki." * * *

"Q. Is Osaki the only Japanese you saw there at that time? A. No, I saw a number of Japanese there, but he was the only one I talked to." * * *

"Q. Did you see any other Japanese except Osaki there at that time? A. No." * * *

"Q. Did you leave the lease or a copy of it with Osaki? A. Yes." * * *

"Q. Were you to see him again? A. Yes, we made an appointment with Osaki."

The statutes before us test the extent to which a state may go in safeguarding itself against evasions of its policies enacted into laws, to promote the safety, peace, and good order of its people. That such powers, known as powers of police, were reserved to each state at the time of the adoption of the federal Constitution, and that "in the exercise of such powers the state has wide discretion in determining its own public policy and what measures are necessary for its own protection and properly to promote the safety, peace and good order of its people" (Terrace v. Thompson, 263 U. S. 197, 217, 44 S. Ct. 15, 18, 68 L. Ed. 255; Porterfield v. Webb, 195 Cal. 71, 231 P. 554), is definitely put at rest by the decisions of the highest courts of our land. By the common law, an alien could not acquire real property by operation of law, as by descent, but he could take by purchase. Story, J., in Fairfax's Devisee v. Hunter's Lessee, 7 Cranch, 603, 608, 619, 620, 3 L. Ed. 453, said: "In the language of the ancient law, the alien has the capacity to take, but not to hold lands, and they may be seized into the hands of the sovereign."

The treaty between the United States and Japan is "a treaty of commerce and navigation" and was entered into for the purpose of establishing the rules to govern commercial intercourse between the countries, and it gives no rights to the subjects of Japan to own or lease lands for agricultural purposes. Terrace v. Thompson, supra. That the Alien Land Acts which the Legislature attempted to strengthen and render more effective by the amendatory statutes under attack are of transcendent importance to the safety and peace of the state and nation is thus forcibly stated in Terrace v. Thompson, supra: "The quality and allegiance of those who own, occupy and use the farm lands within its borders are matters of highest importance and affect the safety and power of the state itself."

We have emphasized the importance of the object sought to be accomplished by said amendments as bearing favorable comparison with a long list of regulatory and prohibitive acts which affect internal welfare, but which do not, as do the amendments before us, so directly affect national safety, and are, therefore, of less importance, so far as immediately and vitally affecting the safety of the state is concerned, to which judicial approval was given—even in the absence of authorizing statutes—to the application of the general rule that when the negative of an issue does not permit direct proof, or where the facts come more immediately within the knowledge of the defendant, the onus probandi rests upon him. Our own courts are among the long list of courts which have given their sanction to the rule in appropriate cases. While the subjects to which the rule has been applied are numerous, only the following will be mentioned: The regulation of the practice of medicine, dentistry, and optometry; acts affecting public morals and the marital status, as bigamy, abortion; the right to take fish and game; violation of an act interdicting commercial intercourse between this country and Great Britain, its colonies, and dependencies, and providing against the importation of British goods into this country except when brought in by neutral vessels; the rule as to the burden of proof being placed upon the defendant when the issue of insanity in criminal cases is offered as an excuse for the commission of crime; section 190, Penal Code, providing that the death penalty shall not be imposed upon any person for murder committed before such person shall have reached the age of eighteen years, and providing, further, that the burden of proof as to the age of said person shall be upon the defendant. To this list may be added numerous regulatory acts and ordinances making it an offense to exercise certain acts or engage in certain businesses or callings without first having obtained a license or franchise to do so. In practically all of such cases where the negative of an issue does not permit direct proof, or where the facts come more immediately within the knowledge of the defendant, the general rule that the onus probandi rests upon him has been applied. Nor is this rule an innovation or a creation of modernists. It was recognized at common law and applied by the very able American and English jurists, beginning with an early period in the history of both. In the earlier treatises and decisions, the necessity of negating an exception in an indictment depended upon the distinction between a proviso, not referred to in the enacting clause of the statute, and a reference in that clause to exceptions subsequently enumerated.

In Fleming v. People, 27 N. Y. 329, the indictment contained none of the statutory exceptions which rendered a subsequent marriage valid. The eminent Chief Justice Denio, in 1863, in a separate opinion, expressed the view that the indictment, which failed to negative the exceptions, was formally defective in a technical sense, but, within the meaning of the Revised Statutes, which in terms are strikingly similar to our article 6, section 4½, state Constitution, and provided "that no indictment shall be deemed invalid, nor shall any trial, judgment, or other proceeding thereon, be affected by reason of any defect or imperfection in matters of form, other than those which are enumerated, which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant," the defect was not a substantial defect, and cited several New York cases in support of his view. To show more fully the formal character of the defect, the jurist continues: " * * * It will be material to state that the prosecution was under no necessity of giving evidence to show that the case was not within any of the exceptions. That was matter of defence, to be made out by the prisoner, if he was able to do it. Mr. Archbold's treatise, already referred to, which, without doubt, conforms to the existing practice on criminal trials in England, lays down what evidence it is necessary for the prosecution to produce upon indictments for bigamy, and what the defendant may show in his defence. * * * (Archb. 595.) It is, moreover, a general rule of evidence, that where the negative of an issue does not permit direct proof, or where the facts come more immediately within the knowledge of the defendant, the onus probandi rests upon him. The cases upon this principle are referred to in Cowen & Hill's Notes (p. 490, note 383, Ed. of 1843). Among the cases are the familiar ones of a physician practicing without a license, and the selling of spirituous liquors without license. The prosecution need not prove the want of the qualification. The circumstances referred to in the 9th section of the bigamy act are highly exceptional and of rare occurrence, and rest peculiarly in the knowledge of the defendant." (Italics supplied.) The concluding portions of the opinion are to the effect that upon proof of successive marriages of the defendant, and that the first husband or wife was living when the second marriage took place, the case of the prosecution is prima facie made out, and it then lies with the defendant to show that he is protected by one or the other of the exceptions and that the defendant was misled by allegations of an indictment which plainly stated all that the prosecution was bound to prove, though it did not negative the existence of circumstances which the defendant was at liberty to bring forward in his defense.

The main opinion holds that the clause contained in the section defining the offense of bigamy is rather in the nature of a proviso than an exception. Continuing, it is said: "The statute does not make the condition or the character of either party to the first or second marriage a part of the offence. It makes every second marriage, during the life of the first or second wife, a crime, but provides that the statute shall not apply to certain cases enumerated in another section, and which are cases of desertion [etc.] The averment and the proof to justify a second marriage in any such case are to come from the defendant. Hawkins' Criminal Law (b. 2, ch. 25, § 113) gives the rule that there is no need to allege, in an indictment, that the defendant is not within the benefit of the provisos of a statute, whereon it is founded, and this even as to those statutes which in their purview expressly take notice of the provisos, as by saying none shall do the thing prohibited, otherwise than in such special cases, etc., as are expressed in the act. So Chitty's Criminal Law (283), says it is not necessary to allege that the defendant is not within the benefit of the provisos of the statute, though the purview should expressly notice them, as by saying that none shall do the act prohibited, except in the cases thereafter excepted." Citing a case in which the indictment was laid upon a statute (2, Eliz.) containing an exception the judges there resolved that the better course was to omit the exception in the indictment "notwithstanding it be comprised in the body of the act, in the same manner as if it had been only in a proviso; in which case it is for the prisoner to help himself, as in cases of such a proviso, if he can do it; for the words 'other than,' etc., are but as referring to the provision subsequent in the statute, in which case this matter shall be used but as the proviso itself shall be. * * *

The act of March 1, 1809, chapter 91, section 2 (2 Story's Laws, 1114), prohibited all importation of goods from British ports into the United States. The act of 1814 (3 Stat. 123) excepted importations from British ports in neutral vessels. In a prosecution for an importation of goods in a vessel not neutral (U. S. v. Hayward, 26 Fed. Cas. 240, No. 15336), the question arose as to the necessity of negating in the information the neutrality of the vessel in which the goods were brought into the United States. Justice Story, in deciding the point, said:

"The first objection depends upon the solution of the point, upon whom the burthen of proof rested, as to the neutrality of the vessel, in which the goods were imported. It is very doubtful, whether it was necessary, in the count, to allege that the goods were imported in a vessel not neutral; for the general rule of law is, that it is sufficient to negative the exceptions in the enacting clause of a statute, and exceptions, which come in by way of proviso, or in subsequent statutes, are properly matter of defence for the defendant. [Citation of cases omitted.] The present case seems to fall within the rule, and is not easily, if at all, distinguishable. But it is not necessary to decide this point, because the count does, in fact, negative the vessel's being neutral. * * *

"From the evidence in the case it does not appear, that the plaintiffs knew in what vessel the importation was made, but this was a fact peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant. Besides, the fact of importation being proved, from a British port into the port of Orrington (which must be taken as a necessary preliminary, so far as respects this part of the charge of the court), the case fell within the general words of the act of 1809, and the exception, that they were imported in a neutral ship, was properly matter of defence. The law did not presume that the vessel was neutral in favor of the defendant. The charge was not against the defendant personally of a criminal neglect of duty, but against the goods only, as a positive act, to wit, an illegal importation. And to call upon the plaintiffs to prove that the vessel was not neutral, was to require the proof of a negative allegation, which the plaintiffs had no means in their power to prove, and proofs of the contrary of which, if they existed, were within the reach of the defendant. I cannot distinguish the present case in principle from those, which have been decided on the game laws. There, the declaration must allege, that the defendant is not duly qualified, negating specifically all the exceptions of the statute; and yet it seems admitted, that if the act of killing game be proved, the burthen of proof of his being within the exceptions of the statute is thrown on the defendant. It is perhaps not easy to reconcile with these decisions some of the general doctrines stated in some of the authorities. Such, for instance, as the doctrine, that wherever the charge involves criminality, the law will not easily suppose it; and therefore, if the charge contains a negative, the law will presume the affirmative without proof. If this were universally true, then, under the game laws, the proof of the not being qualified ought to be shown by the plaintiff, for the charge is clearly of a criminal nature. Without pretending to reconcile all the dicta in the books, it seems to me, that in respect to negative allegations, the reasonable rule is, that the burthen of proof shall rest on the party, who holds the affirmative; and especially where the facts are peculiarly within his privity and cognizance; and that this rule applies more strongly, where the party seeks to shelter himself under an exception, which was not incorporated into the original prohibition of the statute creating the offence. See Attorney General v. Sheriff, Forrest, 43. An exception may, perhaps, properly hold, where the charge substantially consists in a criminal neglect or omission of duty. It seems to me, therefore, that the burthen of proof, in the case at bar, that the vessel in which the goods were imported was neutral, lay on the claimant and not on the United States, and that in this respect the charge of the learned judge was erroneous. * * *

"It is very doubtful," the eminent justice continues, "whether it was necessary, in the count, to allege that the goods were imported in a vessel not neutral; for the general rule of law is, that it is sufficient to negative the exceptions in the enacting clause of a statute, and exceptions, which come in by way of proviso, or in subsequent statutes, are properly matter of defence for the defendant." (Italics supplied.)

Section 1 of the Alien Land Act provides:

"All aliens eligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States may acquire, possess, enjoy * * * real property, or any interest therein, in this state, in the same manner and to the same extent as citizens of the United States, except as otherwise provided by the laws of this state."

Section 2 provides:

"All aliens other than those mentioned in section one of this act may acquire, possess, enjoy and transfer real property * * * in the manner and to the extent and for the purpose prescribed by any treaty now existing between the government of the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject, and not otherwise."

By the foregoing sections, all aliens eligible to citizenship may acquire real property on equal terms with citizens, except as otherwise provided by the laws of the state. By section 2, persons not eligible to citizenship are limited in this respect to such rights as are conferred by treaty. A rearrangement of language would not alter the sense or purpose of the act. The disturbing question of whether the exception is in the enacting clause or in a subsequent clause, or subsequent section of the clause, led to such refinement as to justly provoke the observation made in State v. Abbey, 29 Vt. 60, 67 Am. Dec. 754, that "there seems to be many shadowy distinctions, the sound reason and good sense of which are not easily discoverable." State v. Abbey was a prosecution for bigamy. It is true that the court held that the exceptions contained in the penal act were such as need not be negatived, but it also recognizes the rule of convenience in the following significant language: "The difficulty and impracticability arising from a different construction of the act, is itself a good reason why it should not be adopted; particularly as all the matters embraced in those exceptions are peculiarly within the knowledge of the respondent." An examination of the authorities will show that the reason stated in the above quotation is practically the reason that rules all the cases where the question of negative allegations is present.

Discussing the subject of negative allegations, Justice Story (U. S. v. Hayward, supra) observed: "It is very doubtful, whether it was necessary, in the count, to allege that the goods were imported in a vessel not neutral; for the general rule of law is, that it is sufficient to negative the exceptions in the enacting clause of a statute, and exceptions, which come in by way of proviso, or in subsequent statutes, are properly matter of defence for the defendant." (Italics supplied.)

In the instant case, subsequent statutes by express language place upon the defendant—who, in the instant case, if not conceded to be a member of an ineligible race is proved to be such—the burden of showing that he is a citizen of this country by birth. The intent and effect of this subsequent legislation is too obvious to admit of doubt. The judicial rule which the people would apply to the instant case, and which has become a statute of this state, had its origin in the early period of our judicial history. It received the express sanction of this court in People v. Boo Doo Hong, 122 Cal. 607, 55 P. 402, 403. The prosecution therein was conducted under the State Medical Act, the defendant being charged with the crime of practicing medicine without first having procured a certificate to so practice. No evidence was introduced on either side tending to show that the defendant had or had not a certificate to so practice. The court instructed the jury that the burden was upon the defendant to establish that he had a certificate to so practice medicine as provided by law, and, if he failed to prove that he had such a certificate, then it must be taken as true that he had not procured a certificate. The judgment of conviction was approved, the court adopting as the basis of its decision a paragraph taken from Greenleaf on Evidence. We quote the court's foreword as well as said paragraph:

"Mr. Greenleaf, in his work on Evidence (volume 1, § 79), under the heading 'Negative Allegations,' says: 'But, when the subject-matter of a negative averment lies peculiarly within the knowledge of the other party, the averment is taken as true, unless disproved by that party. Such is the case in civil or criminal prosecutions for a penalty for doing an act which the statutes do not permit to be done by any persons, except those who are duly licensed therefor; as, for selling liquors, exercising a trade or profession, and the like. Here the party, if licensed, can immediately show it without the least inconvenience; whereas, if proof of the negative were required, the inconvenience would be very great,' citing a large number of cases. See, also, 3 Rice on Ev. § 260, where the same rule is declared."

People v. Fortch, 13 Cal. App. 770, 110 P. 823, a dental case, and People v. T. Wah Hing, 47 Cal. App. 327, 190 P. 662; People v. Goscinsky, 52 Cal. App. 62, 198 P. 40, and People v. Saunders, 61 Cal. App. 341, 215 P. 120, medical cases, followed by direct reference People v. Boo Doo Hong, supra. Many additional cases covering the same and other subjects, notably the regulation and prohibition of the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors, could be cited in large numbers which follow the rule approved by Justice Story to the effect "that in respect to negative allegations, the reasonable rule is, that the burden of proof shall rest on the party who holds the affirmative; and especially where the facts are peculiarly within his privity and cognizance," etc.

The reasons for applying the principle approved in the medical, dental, optometry, intoxicating liquor, and certain other concrete cases obviously do not rest upon firmer grounds of public necessity, urgency, or convenience than do those which support the application of the rule in cases in which the question of eligibility to citizenship and the right of ownership of the soil is directly involved. The enactment and enforcement of laws which have to do with public morals and police regulations are powers which primarily inhere in citizenship. Unless the evidence as to the right to exercise the prerogatives of a citizen comes from the defendant who indisputably is in possession of the facts which may be furnished by him without causing him any great inconvenience, a search with uncertain results must be made by the state of a multitude of records extending to the four corners of the United States and its possessions, and into foreign lands, while the right to practice medicine may be readily determined by an inspection of a register to be found in the custody of a single officer. We doubt not that the same courts which gave being to the rule would have unhesitatingly applied it to the facts of the instant case, as illustrative of the principle announced, had such a case arisen. The views expressed by Justice Story in U. S. v. Hayward, supra, which are included in our quotation from that case, precludes any other conclusion.

The common-law rule, which has come to be known as the "rule of convenience," has been recognized and applied by our federal and state courts in large numbers, in the absence of a statute to that effect. We will not attempt to list the numerous cases. The state of Missouri adopted an act making it an offense for any person not standing in the relation of husband or wife, parent or child, grandparent or grandchild, brother or sister, to aid and assist another to escape arrest. One Miller was indicted and convicted of having aided and assisted Grant Woodward in escaping arrest. The indictment negatived the existence of relationship, but the state did not offer evidence to show that the defendant was not within the degree of relationship to the person assisted, which constituted the exceptions. In treating the subject, the Supreme Court of Missouri, in State v. Miller, 182 Mo. 370, 81 S. W. 867, 873, restates the rule which has received the approval of a great majority of the courts of the Union, Professor Wigmore and other text writers. It is there said:

"While it is true this exception of relations in certain degrees appears in the enacting clause of this statute, and therefore it was necessary for the grand jury to negative such a relationship, yet it is also true that, if such a relation existed, it was an absolute defense, whether Woodward was guilty or not, and it is a reasonable presumption in the practical administration of justice that a man is acquainted with his own relatives, or at least knows of his relationship to those within the degrees fixed by the statute, and when, as in this case, the defendant was shown to have sworn he did not know who Grant Woodward was, it would have been a work of supererogation for the state to have gone further in proving the negative. It is true the defendant did not have to prove his innocence; but, if there was any such relationship as would have excused him in aiding Woodward to make his escape, it was peculiarly within his own knowledge, and he has not availed himself of it. * * *

"While we think the grand jury was required to negative the relationship of Woodward and defendant, we hold that the knowledge of such a relationship as would, under the statute, excuse defendant for aiding and assisting Woodward escaping arrest, was within the peculiar knowledge of defendant, and could have been established without any inconvenience, and upon the authority of our own decisions, as well as those quoted from the common-law authorities, the burden was on him to show the relationship, which would itself have entitled him to an acquittal."

In State v. Evans, 50 N. C. 250, a liquor case, the judgment was reversed on the ground that the evidence was as fully within the knowledge of an accessible third person as it was within the knowledge of the defendant, and on that ground a reversal was entered. The decision recognizes the rule of necessity as founded alike on reason and authority. In that case, under the facts above referred to, the court said: "We think it best to adhere to the general rule until the Legislature may think proper to alter it." Here, also, is a recognition by the court of the power of the Legislature to adopt a statute such as we have before us.

Many cases may be found in the books in which the rule of convenience or necessity was applied, even where there seemed to be no rational connection between the fact proved and the fact presumed. In other cases, the presumption doctrine and the rule of necessity or convenience are both applied with approval. Casey v. United States, 276 U. S. 413, 48 S. Ct. 373, 374, 72 L. Ed. 632, is a typical case. Casey was convicted upon an indictment charging him with the purchase of a certain quantity of morphine not in or from the original stamped package. No testimony was introduced directly concerning the purchase, and the government relied in part at least upon the presumption of a violation of the act which the statute purported to create. Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court and Justice Butler placed a dissent on a ground which is also urged here, that the corpus delicti had not been proved. Justice Holmes, discussing presumptions and the rule of convenience or necessity, said:

"With regard to the presumption of the purchase of a thing manifestly not produced by the possessor, there is a 'rational connection between the fact proved and the ultimate facts presumed.' (Luria v. United States, 231 U. S. 9, 25, 34 S. Ct. 10, 58 L. Ed. 101; Yee Hem v. United States, 268 U. S. 178, 183, 45 S. Ct. 470, 69 L. Ed. 904). Furthermore, there are presumptions that are not evidence in a proper sense but simply regulations of the burden of proof. Greer v. United States, 245 U. S. 559, 38 S. Ct. 209, 62 L. Ed. 469. The statute here talks of prima facie evidence, but it means only that the burden shall be upon the party found in possession to explain and justify it when accused of the crime that the statute creates. 4 Wigmore, Evidence, § 2494. It is consistent with all the constitutional protections of accused men to throw on them the burden of proving facts peculiarly within their knowledge and hidden from discovery by the Government. 4 Wigmore, Evidence, § 2486. In dealing with a poison not commonly used except upon a doctor's prescription easily proved, or for a debauch only possible by a breach of law, it seems reasonable to call on a person possessing it in a form that warrants suspicion to show that he obtained it in a mode permitted by the law. The petitioner cannot complain of the statute except as it affects him."

The case of Yee Hem v. U. S., 268 U. S. 178, 45 S. Ct. 470, 69 L. Ed. 904, is an instructive case as to questions of the power of the state to create presumptions and acts which it is argued contravene the due process of law clauses of the federal and state Constitutions. We quote somewhat fully from that decision for the reason that it has a bearing upon a number of questions raised by appellants, including the objection that the law compels an accused person to be a witness against himself. Yee Hem was convicted of concealing a quantity of smoking opium after importation, with knowledge that it had been imported in violation of an act of Congress prohibiting its importation except for certain designated purposes only. It further provided that whenever the defendant on trial is shown to have, or to have had, possession of such opium, such possession shall be deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction, unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury. It was also provided that all opium prepared for smoking found within the United States shall be presumed to have been unlawfully imported, and the burden of proof shall be on the accused to rebut such presumption. Possession and concealment were proved, and the lower court instructed the jury in accordance with the language of the statute. The court, speaking through Mr. Justice Sutherland, said:

"The authority of Congress to prohibit the importation of opium in any form and, as a measure reasonably calculated to aid in the enforcement of the prohibition, to make its concealment with knowledge of its unlawful importation a criminal offense, is not open to doubt. * * *

"In Mobile, etc., R. R. v. Turnipseed, 219 U. S. 35, 42, 43, 31 S. Ct. 136, 137, 138, 55 L. Ed. 78, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 226, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 463, this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Lurton, said:

"The law of evidence is full of presumptions either of fact or law. The former are, of course, disputable, and the strength of any inference of one fact from proof of another depends upon the generality of the experience upon which it is founded. * * *

"Legislation providing that proof of one fact shall constitute prima facie evidence of the main fact in issue is but to enact a rule of evidence, and quite within the general power of government. Statutes, national and state, dealing with such methods of proof in both civil and criminal cases abound, and the decisions upholding them are numerous. * * *

"Every accused person, of course, enters upon his trial clothed with the presumption of innocence. But that presumption may be overcome, not only by direct proof, but, in many cases, when the facts standing alone are not enough, by the additional weight of a countervailing legislative presumption. If the effect of the legislative act is to give to the facts from which the presumption is drawn an artificial value to some extent, it is no more than happens in respect of a great variety of presumptions not resting upon statute. See Dunlop v. United States, 165 U. S. 486, 502, 503, 17 S. Ct. 375, 41 L. Ed. 799; Wilson v. United States, 162 U. S. 613, 619, 16 S. Ct. 895, 40 L. Ed. 1090. In the Wilson Case the accused, charged with murder, was found, soon after the homicide, in possession of property that had belonged to the dead man. This court upheld a charge of the trial court to the effect that such possession required the accused to account for it, to show that as far as he was concerned the possession was innocent and honest, and that if not so accounted for it became 'the foundation for a presumption of guilt against the defendant.'

"The point that the practical effect of the statute creating the presumption is to compel the accused person to be a witness against himself may be put aside with slight discussion. The statute compels nothing. It does no more than to make possession of the prohibited article prima facie evidence of guilt. It leaves the accused entirely free to testify or not as he chooses. If the accused happens to be the only repository of the facts necessary to negative the presumption arising from his possession, that is a misfortune which the statute under review does not create but which is inherent in the case. The same situation might present itself if there were no statutory presumption and a prima facie case of concealment with knowledge of unlawful importation were made by the evidence. The necessity of an explanation by the accused would be quite as compelling in that case as in this; but the constraint upon him to give testimony would arise there, as it arises here, simply from the force of circumstances and not from any form of compulsion forbidden by the Constitution."

In practically every criminal prosecution the defendant is required, from necessity, to rebut the effect of the evidence offered against him, and, frequently, where there is no other rebutting witness but himself, to an incriminating fact or circumstance, the necessity of the situation compels him to take the witness chair.

It would serve no purpose to cite an accumulation of authorities as to the general rule that the burden of proof lies on the person who wishes to support his cause by a particular fact which lies more peculiarly within his knowledge, or as to the broad power which inheres in legislative bodies to create by statute presumptions, as observed, supra, by Mr. Justice Sutherland, in aid of the enforcement of important state policies.

With the foregoing decisions and treatises furnishing the background of the legislation here challenged as being in violation of the due process clause of the organic law of the state and nation, we proceed to a consideration of the decisions of this state upon which appellants rely for a reversal. The principal case is People v. Quarez, 196 Cal. 404, 238 P. 363, 366. The statute under which that case (St. 1923, c. 339, p. 695) was decided provided that no unnaturalized foreign-born person and no person who had suffered a prior conviction of a felony against the person or property of another, or against the federal government or state government, shall own or have in his possession or under his custody or control any pistol, revolver, or other firearm capable of being concealed upon the person. The firearms capable of being concealed include such as have a barrel less than twelve inches in length. The penalty prescribed for a violation of the act is imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one nor more than five years.

The Quarez Case was decided in July, 1925, and the amendments here under consideration were adopted at the first session of the Legislature convening thereafter. It is manifest that said amendments were adopted with the purpose of embodying in the law in concrete form an act providing that the burden is upon persons who are members of alien races ineligible to citizenship and who are exercising rights of a proprietary character with respect to real property, to make proof of their eligibility in cases where their dealings with real property are conducted in a covert manner or otherwise disclose circumstances sufficient to "warrant the suspicion" that their right of ownership or occupancy is not permitted by law. (Casey v. United States, supra.) The Quarez Case was decided largely, if not entirely, upon the authority of People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 140, 131 P. 127, 129, a decision in which three of the justices, for reasons not revealed, took no part. The defendant in the case was convicted under section 476a, Penal Code, on a charge of drawing a check upon a bank in which he had no sufficient funds or credit to meet said check, all of which he well knew. There was no evidence in the case that the defendant had no funds in or credit with the bank, except the confession of the defendant. The check was deposited by the payee in a local bank and forwarded to the bank on which the check was drawn. In due time, it was returned with the words "No account" written across its face. No evidence was offered to show by whom the words "No account" were written. In the decision it was said:

"We are aware of the fact that many cases properly hold very slight proof of the corpus delicti to be sufficient basis for the admission of a defendant's confession, but we know of none which sustains proof of the corpus delicti upon purely hearsay testimony. People v. Spencer, 16 Cal. App. 759, 117 P. 1039, is cited with apparent confidence by the Attorney General, but that was a case in which the appellant contended that his want of credit with the bank was not sufficiently shown. The court held that such a fact might be proved by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence. * * *

The decision expressly states that the fact as to whether the defendant had funds in the bank was as clearly and fully within the knowledge of the bank officials as it was within the knowledge of the defendant. The name and location of the bank was definitely stated in the information, and there was absolutely no theory upon which the rule of convenience could have been invoked. All that was said on that subject may be regarded as obiter dicta. It is not held, even by way of dicta, or otherwise, that the rule is applicable only to prosecutions, such as practicing some profession, or following some calling, without the license provided therefor by law. It is true that it is said that it is a special rule applicable to such cases "and the like," but no fixed limitation is placed upon the application of the rule. The clause disposing of the cases reads: "The ruling of the court in permitting proof of the confession before proper proof of the corpus delicti was error for which a reversal must be ordered."

The rule of convenience was not intended to and it is not now contended that it should have been applied to the Frey Case, for the obvious reason that the bank in which defendant represented he had money on deposit was as well within the knowledge of the prosecution as it was within the knowledge of the defendant, and the prosecution, having offered no competent evidence tending to establish that fact, failed under all rules of law to prove its case, the confession alone having been held insufficient to prove the corpus delicti. The rule of convenience was neither a factor in that case, the Frey Case, nor in the other cited case, People v. White-man, 114 Cal. 338, 46 P. 99. The Quarez Case, however, recognizes the rule in the following language: "It is a well settled rule of law that where the negative of an issue does not permit of direct proof, or where the facts come more immediately within the knowledge of the defendant, the onus probandi rests upon him. This doctrine is illustrated in cases of practicing medicine without a license or of selling spirituous liquors without a license." (Italics supplied.) It does not recite the fact that the rule was applied years before a license was required to practice medicine. That medical cases are cited as apt illustrations of the rule by no means limits its application to such cases only, and no case so holds. The books, reports, and law texts contain a multitude of cases which furnish their own refutation of the claim that the rule is not applicable to any other specific offenses. If the refusal to apply the rule in the instant case can be soundly based upon the theory that every part of a statutory offense must be affirmatively proved, and the burden cannot under any circumstances be shifted to the defendant, by what process of reasoning can it be made to appear just or logical to apply it to medical and license cases, as to which the knowledge of the accused as to whether he is licensed to practice medicine is not more intimately and peculiarly within his knowledge than is the fact of citizenship within the knowledge of one who asserts prerogatives which are only accorded to citizens of the country?

"Where the subject-matter of a negative averment in the indictment, or a fact relied upon by defendant as a justification or excuse, relates to him personally [as citizenship] or otherwise lies peculiarly within his knowledge, the general rule is that the burden of proof as to such averment or fact is on him." (Also citing 22 Cor. Jur., p. 81.) (Italics supplied.)

If every element of a statutory offense, both negative and affirmative, must be proved by the prosecution, and the burden cannot, in any case, be placed upon the defendant, on the theory that every element descriptive of the offense is an essential part of the corpus delicti, and must be affirmatively proved, the rule created by courts in the first instance upon considerations of necessity and public policy, and adopted by this state as a statute, will be completely nullified.

[3] In the instant case, the statute requires that the people prove all the facts which the law-making body determined were reasonably within the power of the people to prove, to wit, first, that the accused is a member of a race ineligible to citizenship, and, second, that he has acquired real property, or an interest therein, both of which are provable by facts, records, and documents existent within the limits of the locality and state in which the land is situate, while the place of birth may be anywhere upon the globe, known only to the accused. If in the practical and reasonable administration of the law any situation could exist which would justify the application of the rule ab inconvenienti, none could be more appropriate for its application than the determination of the question of foreign birth, a fact intimately and peculiarly within the knowledge of the person, who, by the exercise of certain rights, has assumed to be native born. Conceding, as contended by appellants, that foreign nativity forms a part of the corpus delicti, the allegations of the indictment that the defendant was an alien not eligible to citizenship must be taken as true in the absence of proof to the contrary.

The rule of convenience was expressly held applicable to this class of cases in People v. Velasquez, 70 Cal. App. 362, 233 P. 359, 361, Mr. Justice Curtis, then a justice of the District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, writing the opinion of the court. One of the questions discussed was as to the method of proving whether or not the defendant, who was charged with the unlawful possession of a firearm capable of being concealed—the same offense charged in the Quarez Case—had been naturalized by the courts of this country. The rule of convenience is thus treated:

"This rule is applied in the main to prosecutions of persons charged with the violation of statutes making it illegal to engage in certain businesses or to follow certain professions without first obtaining a license so to do. In most, if not in all of the cases of which we have any knowledge, the statute designates the particular board or officer from which such a license is to be obtained. The inconvenience in such a case of procuring evidence that the accused had no such license as required by the statute can hardly be compared with that cast upon the prosecution in an action like the present, if required to prove that the defendant had not been naturalized. In the former class of cases, it would only be necessary to examine the records of one board, or the books of one officer, to ascertain whether the required license had been issued or not, and to have as a witness one person from the office of such a board, or officer, to prove the fact that no license had been issued to the accused. In an action like that before us, owing to the fact that the defendant might have been naturalized in any one of a large number of courts, it would be necessary to have as witnesses at the trial representatives or officers from all of said courts, and possibly the records themselves to show, if such were the fact, that the defendant had never been naturalized in any of said courts. Such a requirement would cast upon the prosecution an interminable amount of labor and the greatest of inconvenience. On the other hand, to require the defendant to show that he was naturalized casts no unreasonable burden upon him. If he has had conferred upon him, by any court of competent jurisdiction, the privilege of citizenship, he either has his naturalization papers, or, if they have been lost, properly authenticated copies thereof might be procured with little trouble or expense from the court which granted the original. We are therefore of the opinion that this exception to the general rule, relative to the burden of proof, should apply to actions like the present, and that it was not obligatory on the part of the prosecution to prove that the defendant had not been naturalized. His naturalization, if such were the fact, was peculiarly within his own knowledge and could have been proven by him with but little inconvenience."

All of the California cases cited by appellants were decided prior to any legislative enactment similar in purport to the amendments under consideration. This brings us to the power of the Legislature to enact sections 9a and 9b of the Alien Land Act and section 1983, Code of Civil Procedure. We need not repeat the language used by the United States Supreme Court in Terrace v. Thompson, supra, as to the broad powers vested in sovereignty in determining what measures are necessary for its own protection and properly promote the safety, peace, and good order of its people in legislating upon this particular subject. Cockrill v. People of State of California, 268 U. S. 258, 45 S. Ct. 490, 69 L. Ed. 944. The general power of the Legislature to create legal presumptions of evidence and also presumptions that are not evidence in a proper sense, but simply regulations of the burden of proof, are fully considered in Casey v. United States and cases cited therein. The law, as therein observed, is full of presumptions. Nor are we forced, in sustaining the legislation in the instant case, to go as far as courts may properly go, as was said in Yee Hem v. United States, supra:

"If the effect of the legislative act is to give to the facts from which the presumption is drawn an artificial value to some extent, it is no more than happens in respect of a great variety of presumptions not resting upon statute." Citing Dunlop v. U. S., 165 S. 486, 17 S. Ct. 375, 41 L. Ed. 799; Wilson v. U. S., 162 U. S. 613, 16 S. Ct. 895, 40 L. Ed. 1090.

Appellants contend, and cite numerous cases as authority in support of their contention, that a rational connection between the fact proved and the ultimate fact presumed must exist. In most all of the cases cited to the point, there is no semblance of rationality between the fact proved and the fact presumed. Appellants rely with seeming assurance upon two comparatively recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court, Manley v. Georgia, 279 U. S. 1, 49 S. Ct. 215, 217, 73 L. Ed. 575, and Western & Atlantic Railroad v. Henderson, 279 U. S. 639, 49 S. Ct. 445, 446, 73 L. Ed. 884. The first of these cases was upon a statute of Georgia which provided that every insolvency of a bank should be deemed fraudulent and the president and directors should be punished by imprisonment and labor in the state penitentiary for not less than one or more than ten years, provided that the defendant might repel the presumption of fraud by showing that the affairs of the bank had been fairly and legally administered. The indictment merely alleged that the appellant, being president of a certain bank, and he and two others being directors and the accused being by law charged with the fair and legal administration of the business and affairs of said bank, then and there pending, and during the official charge and responsibility of the accused said bank became fraudulently insolvent. The court, upon considering the facts to be presumed, held that they were vague and uncertain and the connection between the fact proved and that presumed was not sufficient, expressing itself as follows: "Unforeseen demands in excess of the reserves required do not tend to show that the crime created by section 28 has been committed. The same may be said as to the other conditions defined as insolvency. The connection between the fact proved and that presumed is not sufficient." The rule of convenience was not discussed. The other case rested upon a Georgia statute, which provided: "A railroad company shall be liable for any damages done to persons, stock, or other property by the running of the locomotives, or cars, or other machinery of such company, or for damage done by any person in the employment and service of such company, unless the company shall make it appear that their agents have exercised all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, the presumption in all cases being against the company."

In condemning the statute, the court remarked that a statute creating a presumption that is arbitrary, or that operates to deny a fair opportunity to repel it, violates the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. In this case, no reference was made to the rule of convenience, and obviously there was no room for its application for the reason that the facts were as accessible to appellees as they were to appellants.

Those cases and others cited by appellants, in which the connection between the facts proved and the fact presumed is more arbitrary and irrational than disclosed by said cases, do not change the rule approved by numerous judicial pronouncements which have been and which may readily be cited.

In appraising the validity of the amendments and statute in suit, courts cannot put aside the historical controversies which preceded the adoption of the Alien Land Acts and the reasons which impelled their adoption. Neither can we put aside the various difficulties which the state has experienced in its attempt to enforce said acts. These difficulties arise in no small measure from the difficulty of identifying one member of the several ineligible alien races from another by reason of racial similitudes. They speak in Oriental languages which have no basic relation or resemblance to the English or Latin languages, and, because of their Oriental forms of worship and their lack of knowledge of and interest in our national and ancestral traditions and future objectives, they live in groups or communities having no social, civic, or political intercourse with the citizens of the country, or those eligible to become citizens, hedged in by impenetrable privacy and secrecy as to their status as citizens and affairs generally to a degree that nowhere else obtains.

In the instant case, the evidence shows Osaki to be a member of an alien race ineligible to citizenship. His companions and associates in business were of that race. He was unable to speak the English language, and testified with the assistance of an interpreter of the Japanese language. If alien born, he was ineligible to citizenship and, if native born, he was not entitled to exercise the right of franchise under the laws of the state. No alien shall be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who cannot speak the English language. (U. S. Code Annot., Aliens and Citizenship, title 8, sec. 365, p. 415 [8 USCA § 365]). His physical appearance was before the court, and a number of witnesses testified that he was a Japanese and to other facts which tended to show beyond doubt that he was of that race. In testifying, he made no denial of this obvious fact, nor did he testify as to the place of his nativity, but contented himself with the denial of being the owner of or in any way interested in the real property described in the indictment, over which he exercised indisputable rights of a proprietor. One of the difficulties, as this case well illustrates, is to show the interest of the accused where ineligibility in fact exists. Professor Wigmore, in speaking of the applicability of the rule of convenience, says it is "merely a question of policy and fairness based on experience in the different situations." Said amendments are both fair, and are based on experience.

That the state might in the exercise of its powers adopt a system or establish a bureau by which all persons who are members of a race ineligible to citizenship, whether native or alien born, should be required to conform to registration laws, and those failing to do so would be presumed to be alien born, would be but to adopt an artificial means of doing that which is done in a more direct way by the present law. That the state has not seen fit to adopt one method rather than another is no concern of courts, unless it has transcended its powers in the premises.

It is not intended by what we have said to extend the rule of convenience or burden of proof to common-law crimes generally designated as malum in se, nor to all crimes malum prohibitum. We go no further than to apply the rule to the particular situation in accordance with the express mandate of said amendments.

[4] Appellants complain that the fourth and sixth counts of the indictment rest upon laws which are ex post facto, the offenses therein alleged having been committed prior to the adoption of said amendments and statute of 1927. We think there is no merit in this contention. The amendments do not make any act committed prior to the adoption of said amendments and statutes a crime which was innocent if done prior thereto, nor aggravate the crime, nor impose a greater punishment than was annexed to the crime when committed, nor alter the legal rules of evidence and receive less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense. We are of the view that the better reason supports the conclusion that the burden, in cases involving questions of naturalization and alienage, has always been upon the defendant, who has intimate and peculiar knowledge of the fact.

[5] Appellants further complain that no specific instruction was given to the jury informing them that the burden was upon the people to prove that Osaki was a member of an alien race ineligible to citizenship. It would have been better practice for the court to have read the law to the jury in full. However, in this case, we are unable to see that the appellants were injured by the failure of the court to instruct on this issue. As we read the record, the case was tried on the theory that Osaki was of alien ineligible blood. It was the country of his nativity, to which no direct testimony was offered, as well as the denial that he was the owner of or had any interest in the real property described in the indictment, which were the issues upon which the case was tried. The jury found Osaki guilty. It could not have done so unless it found also that he was a member of an alien race ineligible to citizenship.

[6] An instruction was read to the jury which was prepared by and given upon the request of appellants, as follows, the italics being to call attention to the criticized portion:

"Before you can find either of the defendants in this action guilty of a conspiracy to violate the Alien Land Law, under any of the counts named in the indictment, it must appear from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, and to a moral certainty, that some agreement was made or some understanding had by and between the defendant Yoshioka, who is admitted to be an American citizen, and the defendant Osaki, who is an alien ineligible to citizenship, under and by which they conspired together to secure leases of agricultural or farming land and property. * * *

Why such an instruction was offered by the appellants, and how it passed the notice of court and counsel for appellants again upon being read to the jury, is not easily understood. If neither the court nor counsel were awakened by the erroneous statement of fact when made, it will not be presumed that the jury was more alert than the trained expounders of the law, but, rather, that the instruction in the respect pointed out made but little, if any, impression upon any one.

However this may be, the instructions as a whole, and the admissions and contentions of counsel, make it clear beyond doubt that there was no admission, or claim made that it was an accepted fact, that Osaki was "an alien ineligible to citizenship."

Judgments and orders appealed from are affirmed.

PER OURIAM.

The defendant, in company with two other men, was discovered by the police in the city of Riverside, county of Riverside, at about the hour of six o'clock a. m., January 1, 1929, in a condition which indicated that they were under the influence of intoxicating liquor. Upon being accosted by said officers, the defendant was seen to take an instrument from his pocket and lay it behind a small bush. The instrument which he had attempted to conceal was a pistol having a barrel less than twelve inches in length and capable of being concealed upon the person. By the information filed against him, he was charged with having unlawfully in his possession a firearm having a barrel less than twelve inches in length and capable of being concealed upon the person, he being then and there a foreign-born person and not a naturalized citizen of the United States. St. 1923, chap. 339, p. 696. He waived a trial by jury, and was found guilty by the court of the crime charged in the indictment. The defendant offered no evidence either as to the country of his nativity or as to his naturalization. The power of the Legislature to enact section 1983, Code of Civil Procedure, is challenged. This is the only question raised by the appellant. We have, in the case of People v. Osaki and Yoshioka, 286 P. 1025, this day filed, passed upon the validity of said section, as well as upon all other questions which are germane to the point raised by appellant's appeal.

Placing our decision upon the grounds stated in that case, which are applicable to the instant case, it follows that the judgment and orders appealed from must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

PER CURIAM.

The defendant and appellant was charged, tried, and convicted in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles of the crime of unlawfully having in his possession and under his control a firearm having a barrel less than twelve inches in length, to wit, a .38-caliber Colt's automatic pistol. St. 1923, chap. 339, p. 696.

The objections made as to the validity of the judgment are, in the main, the same as those urged in the case of People v. Guzman (Cal. Sup.) 286 P. 1037, this day filed, with the additional assignment of the introduction in evidence of the extrajudicial statement, made at the time of his arrest, that he was of foreign birth. Whether or not this statement was admissible is not important in view of section 1983, Code of Civil Procedure, which placed the burden upon him to prove that he was a citizen of the United States and was, therefore, entitled to exercise all of the prerogatives of citizenship. The appellant offered no evidence whatever as to that issue. The instruction of the court, as to the burden of proof, was in line with the section of the code above cited. Upon the authority of People v. Osaki and Yoshioka (Cal. Sup.) 286 P. 1025, and People v. Guzman (Cal. Sup.) 286 P. 1037, both this day filed, the judgment and orders from which the appeal is taken are affirmed. It is so ordered.

CURTIS, J.

Appellant brought this action to enforce an asserted stockholder's liability against the respondent, as a stockholder of Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., a corporation. The trial court, upon sufficient competent evidence, found as follows:

"That on or about the 29th day of December, 1923, the plaintiff herein agreed with said Wm. H. Reid & Co. to open a trading account with the said Wm. H. Reid & Co., whereby the said Wm. H. Reid & Co., as ordered by the plaintiff, would buy or sell for the account of plaintiff, stock, bonds and securities. That for the purpose of securing the payment by plaintiff of any sums for which he might become obligated in so purchasing and selling stocks, bonds and securities through the agency of the said Wm. H. Reid & Co., the plaintiff deposited with the said Wm. H. Reid & Co., five bonds of Brandram-Henderson Company, a corporation, two of said bonds being in the denomination of Five Hundred ($500.00) Dollars each, and three of said bonds being in the denomination of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) each. That no other or different special contract or agreement other than the order of sale hereinafter mentioned was made between plaintiff and the said Wm. H. Reid & Co., of and concerning the said bonds than as heretofore in this paragraph set forth. That on said date, to-wit: the 29th day of December, 1923, no formal subscription to the stock of the said Wm. H. Reid & Co. had been made by any person, but it had been understood and agreed between Wm. H. Reid, A. T. Connard and A. M. Keene that each of said persons would subscribe equally to the capital stock of said corporation, Wm. H. Reid & Co., and on said date, by virtue of such understanding, the entire capital stock of said corporation had been in fact subscribed by Wm. H. Reid, A. T. Connard and A. M. Keene in equal parts.

"That on the 11th day of March, 1924, there was issued to him, the said A. M. Keene, one thousand (1,000) shares of the capital stock of said Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., a corporation, being the total number of shares to which he had subscribed and that he, the said A. M. Keene, immediately thereafter and while the said bonds of the said Brandram-Henderson Company remained on deposit, as security as aforesaid, and on or about the 11th day of March, 1924, endorsed the said one thousand (1,000) shares of the capital stock of said Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., and for a good and valuable consideration transferred the same, together with all interest he had, or might have had, in said Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., unto the said Wm. H. Reid who thereupon received and retained the same.

"That thereafter and in the month of June, 1924, pursuant to an order given to the said Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., by the plaintiff in the above entitled action, the said bonds of Brandram-Henderson Company were by the said Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., sold and disposed of; that the said Wm. H. Reid & Co. sold and disposed of said bonds for the sum of Three Thousand Five Hundred Eighty-six and 38/100 Dollars. That at said time the plaintiff owed to the said Wm. H. Reid & Co. on account of said trading account a balance of Two Hundred Forty-Nine and 67/100 Dollars ($249.67). That the said Wm. H. Reid & Co. has not accounted to or paid over to plaintiff the balance of the selling price of said bonds, to-wit: the sum of Three Thousand Three Hundred Thirty-six and 61/100 dollars ($3,336.61), or any part thereof."

Appellant questions the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the court as to the proportionate amount of the stock of the Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., owned by A. M. Keene, and also that the bonds deposited by the plaintiff with said corporation were sold "pursuant to an order given to Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., by the plaintiff." We think there is substantial evidence in the record to support each of these findings, and we deem it unnecessary to discuss in detail the testimony of the various witnesses bearing upon the issues involved in said findings.

The facts as found by the court, to state them briefly, show that on December 29, 1923, when the plaintiff opened a trading account with said corporation, and deposited the five bonds of the Brandram-Henderson Company, a corporation, with Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., for the purpose of securing the payment of any sums of money that might become due from him, A. M. Keene was at least the equitable owner of 1,000 shares of the capital stock of said corporation; that on March 11, 1924, the said Keene sold, assigned, and transferred all of his stock in said corporation to Wm. H. Reid; and thereafter, and in the month of June of the same year, the said corporation sold said bonds of the Brandram-Henderson Company, deposited by the plaintiff, and, after paying an indebtedness then owing by the plaintiff to said corporation, there remained in the hands of said corporation the sum of $3,336.61, which sum of money was the property of the plaintiff, but said corporation failed to account to or pay over to the plaintiff said sum of money or any part thereof. The conclusion of law drawn by the trial court from these facts was that the liability of said corporation to account to the plaintiff for the proceeds of said sale of stock was created in the month of June, 1924, and not before. It accordingly held that, as Keene was not then a stockholder in said corporation, he was not liable for the payment of any part of said sum of $3,336.61, which the corporation failed to account for or pay over to the plaintiff.

Appellant, the plaintiff in this action, contends that the trial court is in error in arriving at such conclusion, and claims that the liability of said corporation to account to plaintiff for the proceeds of said sale of stock accrued and was created on December 29, 1923, at the date said bonds were deposited with said corporation. Appellant relies upon the two cases of Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, 171 Cal. 500, 153 P. 939, and Chambers v. Farnham, 182 Cal. 191, 187 P. 732, as supporting his contention that the liability which is the basis of this action accrued at the date of the original agreement between him and said corporation, which was December 29, 1923.

These cases hold that the liability of the corporation for which the stockholders become responsible under the Constitution and statutes of this state is created at the time the corporation enters into contractual relations with third persons, and not upon the breach of the contract by the corporation, and therefore those stockholders are liable under the contract who were such at the time the corporation executed the contract.

[1, 2] The trial court, however, further found that Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., sold the Brandram-Henderson Company bonds belonging to the plaintiff pursuant to an order given to said corporation by the plaintiff. It appears from this finding that the sale of said bonds was not made under the contract of pledge by which Wm. H. Reid & Co. originally held said bonds, but by virtue of the order of plaintiff given to Wm. H. Reid & Co. in June, 1924. This order of sale from plaintiff and its acceptance by Wm. H. Reid & Co. as shown by the sale of said bonds created a new and independent contract between the parties and different from the original contract between them when the bonds were deposited with Wm. H. Reid & Co. by plaintiff as security for the latter's indebtedness. This original contract of pledge was terminated by the order of sale given by the plaintiff. Any liability created thereunder was extinguished by the later dealings of the parties. Whatever liability the corporation was thereafter under to the plaintiff was the liability growing out of or arising from the sale of said bonds by Wm. H. Reid & Co., under the express order of the plaintiff. This liability was, of course, to account to plaintiff for the proceeds of said sale. At the time plaintiff gave said order of sale in June, 1924, the defendant was not a stockholder of said company; he having parted with all of his said stock in said company, according to the court's finding, on March 11, 1924. The defendant was not, therefore, liable for any part of the indebtedness resulting from the sale of said bonds and the failure of Wm. H. Reid & Co. to account to the plaintiff for the proceeds of such sale.

The two cases of Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, supra, and Chambers v. Farnham, supra, are not applicable to the facts in this case. On the other hand, the principles of law governing the questions involved in the present action are more like those enunciated in the following decisions from the courts of this state: Yule v. Bishop, 133 Cal. 574, 62 P. 68, 65 P. 1094; Davies v. Torrance, 188 Cal. 179, 204 P. 820; McCann Co. v. Denny (Cal. Sup.) 270 P. 190; Finch v. Finch, 68 Cal. App. 72, 228 P. 553; and Kempton v. Floribel Land & Imp. Co., 46 Cal. App. 456, 189 P. 478, 479. While none of these cases is directly in point, still they lay down general principles which shed considerable light upon the question presented in the present action. For instance, in the case of Kempton v. Floribel Land & Imp. Co., supra, the plaintiffs sued the corporation and two stockholders, the corporation for money theretofore paid by the plaintiffs to the corporation on account of the purchase price of certain lands, which the corporation had agreed to convey to the plaintiffs but had refused to do so, and the stockholders for the proportionate share of said money due from them respectively by reason of their ownership of stock in said corporation. It seems that plaintiffs had entered into a contract with said corporation in the year 1911 whereby the corporation had agreed to sell and convey to plaintiffs certain described land in Marin county. Under this contract, plaintiffs made certain payments called for by the contract and on July 16, 1917, tendered to the corporation the balance due on the contract and demanded a deed to the land from the corporation, which the corporation refused to deliver. The plaintiffs, upon such refusal, treated the contract as rescinded, and sued for the recovery of the money paid thereunder. In the opinion in that case, the court said: "When it becomes clear that the vendor will not or cannot convey in accordance with the terms of his contract, the vendee may sue for damages for the breach, or he may sue in equity for specific performance or alternative damages, or he may treat the contract as rescinded by consent and sue at law for the money theretofore paid on account of the purchase price of the land, to be recovered, not as damages, but as money had and received by the defendant to the use of the plaintiff. If the plaintiff is willing to waive all claims for equitable relief and for damages, the contract is extinguished as fully as it might have been by full performance. Civ. Code §§ 1689, 1691. * * * In such a case the action is not on the original contract upon which the obligation of the stockholders, as well as of the corporation, was fixed at its date, but upon an entirely new obligation to repay the plaintiffs' money which was not incurred until the plaintiffs elected to relieve the corporation from the old obligation. * * * These authorities show that the present case is within the reason of the rule announced in Yule v. Bishop, 133 Cal. 574, 62 P. 68, 65 P. 1094, and not within that on which Chambers v. Farnham, 182 Cal. 191, 187 P. 732, was decided. The action was not on the old obligation to convey, but on the new obligation to repay money to which the plaintiffs were entitled."

So, in the present action, the old obligation whereby the corporation was to hold said bonds as security for plaintiff's indebtedness was extinguished by his order directing the corporation to sell said securities. The present action is not based upon the old obligation, but upon the new one resulting from the order of plaintiff directing the sale of said bonds. As we have seen, the defendant was not then a stockholder of said corporation, and therefore he was not legally liable to the plaintiff upon the obligation incurred by the corporation at the time it undertook the sale of plaintiff's said securities.

The case of Fry v. Baltimore Hotel Co., 80 Cal. App. 415, 252 P. 752, 755, is in many respects similar to the present action. It was there held that, "where an entirely new, different, and distinct agreement is subsequently made, based upon a new and valuable consideration, even though some of the provisions of the former document are incorporated, or referred to and made a part of the new contract, where it is apparent that the purpose of the parties was not to renew or extend the former one, but rather to completely change and alter certain covenants therein contained, it is apparent that the execution of the latter document will create a new obligation on the part of both the corporation and the stockholders, from the date of which their liability will begin to run."

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

PER CURIAM.

In this case, one A. T. Connard was the owner of 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., a corporation, at the time the plaintiff herein deposited with said corporation certain bonds of the Brandram-Henderson Company, as particularly set forth and described in the opinion this day rendered in the case of Comeau v. Keene (Cal. Sup.) 286 P. 1038. On February 28, 1925, the said A. T. Connard died, and the defendant herein, the Bank of Italy, was, on or about the 30th day of April 1925, duly appointed executor of the last will and testament of said A. T. Connard, deceased. In all other respects the facts in the present action are precisely like those in said action of Comeau v. Keene.

Upon the authority of said case, and for the reasons set forth therein, the judgment herein is affirmed.

CURTIS, J.

This action was brought to recover against the defendant on his alleged liability as a stockholder of the Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., a corporation. The facts in this case are in many respects similar to those in the case of Comeau v. Keene (Cal. Sup.) 236 P. 1038, this day decided. The Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., was a corporation carrying on a stock brokerage business, and defendant, one A. T. Connard, and Wm. M. Reid were its sole stockholders. This corporation and these persons and the relations they sustained to the creditors of said corporation are set forth and referred to in the opinion rendered in the case of Comeau v. Keene, supra, and the defendant herein is the same person who is defendant in said action, and this action is predicated upon his ownership of the same stock in said corporation which was made the basis of said action of Comeau v. Keene.

The findings in the present action present the following state of facts: In January, 1924, the plaintiff entered into a tentative agreement to open a trading account with the Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc. At that time the defendant was a stockholder of said corporation. In pursuance of said agreement, plaintiff, in the latter part of the month of March, delivered and deposited with said corporation the sum of $3,350 "as a guarantee to said company for the full performance of his selling and purchasing orders to said company"; that on May 26, 1924, it was mutually agreed between said parties that said agreement should cease and terminate; that said sum of $3,350 was never withdrawn, nor was it ever paid to the plaintiff, although frequent demands therefor had been made by the plaintiff on said corporation for its payment; and that, at the time the plaintiff entered into said agreement, the defendant, Keene, was the owner of 1,000 shares of the capital stock of said corporation. Upon these findings of fact, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed.

It will be noted that, while the court found that defendant was a stockholder in said corporation at the time said agreement was entered into, that is, in January, 1924, there is no finding as to whether defendant owned any stock in said corporation on the 29th and 31st days of March, 1924, the dates on which the plaintiff delivered and deposited with said corporation said sum of $3,350. The findings show that said sum of $3,350 was deposited with said company by plaintiff in two equal amounts on the two dates last mentioned. In the brief filed by counsel for the plaintiff it is asserted that both Keene and Connard transferred their stock in said corporation to Wm. H. Reid on March 11, 1924. This appears to be an admitted fact in the case. We take it, therefore, that the position of the plaintiff is that, by the agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., in January, 1924, a liability was then created against said corporation and in favor of the plaintiff to pay to the plaintiff any money that might thereafter become due him in any transaction having its inception in said agreement, and accordingly that the stockholders of said company who were such at the date of said agreement were responsible for their proportionate share of any indebtedness that might thereafter be incurred by said corporation under said agreement.

The correctness of this position will depend in a large measure upon the character of the agreement upon which the plaintiff relies. We will therefore set out in full the finding of the court embodying said agreement. It is as follows: "That in or about the month of January, 1924; plaintiff herein entered into an agreement with said Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc., hereinafter called the Company, wherein and whereby it was agreed between the plaintiff and said Company, that plaintiff might order through and by said Company the sale or purchase of such corporate stocks and bonds as he might designate to said Company and that said Company would purchase or sell for the account of said plaintiff such corporate stocks and bonds and that plaintiff should from time to time, as demanded of him by said Company, or as desired by said plaintiff in excess of such demands, deliver to said Company such sum or sums of money, or such corporate stocks and bonds in such value as in the judgment of said Company would guarantee it against loss through the failure of plaintiff to pay said Company the full purchase price of such corporate stocks and bonds as he might order through and by it, or through his failure to deliver or cause to be delivered to the purchasers such corporate stocks and bonds as he might order sold by said Company, and that whenever plaintiff or said Company desired to close plaintiff's account with said Company, or whenever said agreement should terminate, said Company should return to said plaintiff all sums of money and all corporate stocks and bonds which plaintiff might have deposited with said Company, or might have left in the possession of said Company as a guarantee for the full performance of its purchasing and selling orders as aforesaid."

[1] Did the mere making of this agreement without the deposit of any money or other property thereunder, or until acted upon in some manner by the parties thereto, create any liability for or against said corporation? A most cursory reading thereof compels a negative answer to the question. At most, it was but a tentative agreement upon which the parties would transact business in case they should thereafter conclude to deal with each other. The plaintiff was under no obligation, after the making of said agreement, to open a trading account with said corporation, or to transact any business whatever with the Wm. H. Reid & Co., Inc. Neither was the corporation under any obligation to the plaintiff until the latter had in some manner acted under said agreement either by placing with the company an order for the purchase of stocks or bonds, or by depositing money or property with said corporation for some purpose enumerated in the agreement. Until some action was taken by plaintiff thereunder, the corporation could with perfect propriety and without violating any rights of the plaintiff have recalled the agreement and ended all negotiations with the plaintiff. Until acted upon by the plaintiff, it was a mere offer of the corporation, and could be withdrawn at any time.

This may have been the type of agreement referred to by Mr. Justice Olney in his concurring opinion in the case of Chambers v. Farnham, 182 Cal. 191, 197, 187 P. 732, 734, wherein he says: "I think, however, it should be said, in addition, that the statement that the date of the incurrence of the contractual obligation by a corporation is the date of the contract has reference only to those cases wherein an obligation, either absolute or contingent, is assumed by the corporation by the very making of the contract itself. This is true in the great generality of cases, but there are not infrequently cases where it is not true. Instances are not uncommon of contracts which, when made, are purely unilateral and under which one of the parties assumes no obligation whatever until the happening of some event entirely within the control of such party. An example is where a contract is made to sell upon certain fixed terms such specified goods or articles as the vendee may subsequently order. Under such a contract no obligation is incurred by the vendee until an order for the goods is given, and if the vendee is a corporation, the statute of limitations as to the liability of its stockholders for the price of the goods will begin to run from the date of the order and not from the date of the original contract."

The same principle is involved in actions of a depositor against stockholders of a bank. In such case it is held that the liability is created, not when the account is opened, but when the particular deposit is made. Gardiner v. Royer, 167 Cal. 238, 139 P. 75; Jones v. Goldtree Bros. Co., 142 Cal. 383, 77 P. 939; Wells v. Black, 117 Cal. 157, 48 P. 1090, 37 L. R. A. 619, 59 Am. St. Rep. 162.

The principles of law governing the case of Comeau v. Keene, supra, are applicable to the facts in the present case. In the former case, a trading agreement had been entered into between the corporation and the plaintiff in said action, and said plaintiff had made a deposit of bonds to secure any indebtedness that might arise under said agreement. This was all done while the defendant Keene was a stockholder of the corporation. But, after Keene had disposed of his stock, the plaintiff in said action directed the corporation to sell said bonds, thus terminating the original contract under which said bonds were held as security and creating a new relation between the parties, a new and different obligation than that which existed under the original agreement. We accordingly held, as the liability of the corporation to account for the proceeds of said sale had its inception in the order of sale, and at a time when the defendant therein was not a stockholder of said corporation, that said defendant was not liaable as a stockholder of said corporation, for any part of the debt of the corporation resulting from the sale of said bonds, and the failure of the corporation to pay to the plaintiff therein the proceeds of such sale.

[2] In this action it was the deposit of the money with the corporation, and the receipt thereof by the corporation, which created the liability upon which the plaintiff herein must recover, if recovery is to be had. At the date of said deposit and receipt, the defendant, Keene, was not a stockholder in said corporation. He is not, therefore, liable for any portion of the indebtedness arising out of said transaction.

The judgment is reversed.

Ex parte BERMAN.

Cr. 1943.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 1, 1930.

1. Criminal law §296 — Plea of double jeopardy — Right to immediate decision.

Petitioner presenting facts necessary to decision of his plea of double jeopardy, had right to immediate decision.

The facts upon which the plea was based were stipulated to be that offense of bribery charged in indictment under which petitioner was then held was also charged in prior indictment upon which petitioner had been tried and acquitted.

2. Criminal law §200(6) — Indictment for conspiracy to bribe — Subsequent indictment for bribery — Double jeopardy.

Defendant, dismissed under indictment charging conspiracy to bribe in language adequately charging bribery, subsequently indicted for bribery, was subjected to double jeopardy (Pen. Code, § 1099).

The first indictment charged defendant with conspiracy to commit crime of giving bribe in violation of Pen. Code, § 67, and crime of asking and receiving a bribe in violation of section 68. At the trial, the charge against defendant was dismissed pursuant to Pen. Code, § 1099, authorizing court on application of district attorney to discharge one of two or more defendants, before defense has been gone into, in order that he might be witness for people.

Application by Jacob Berman for a writ of habeas corpus against the Sheriff of Los Angeles County to secure release of petitioner, being detained in custody upon a charge of bribery.

Petitioner discharged.

Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and R. P. Stewart and Wm. R. McKay, Deputy Dist. Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J.

[1] The petitioner seeks to be released from custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county through a writ of habeas corpus. A plea of once in jeopardy and acquittal was interposed in the superior court, and thereafter a motion to dismiss was made and was denied. The facts upon which the plea was based were stipulated to be that the substantive offense of bribery charged in the indictment under which the petitioner is now held (being herein referred to as indictment No. 35221) is also pleaded and charged in another indictment (herein referred to as indictment No. 35361) upon which the petitioner was tried and acquitted. The charge under indictment No. 35361 was tried, and pursuant to section 1099 of the Penal Code was dismissed as to the defendant Berman.

It appeared that indictment No. 35361 charged the defendant with "conspiracy to commit the crime of giving and offering a bribe in violation of the provisions of section 67 of the Penal Code, a felony, and the crime of asking, receiving and agreeing to receive a bribe in violation of the provisions of section 68 of the Penal Code." Indictment No. 35227 charges the petitioner and others with the crime of bribery. The facts necessary to a disposition of the plea of double jeopardy having been before the court, it only remained to pass upon the legal issue thus presented, and it was the right of the defendants to have a ruling thereon at once.

[2] In passing upon the petition for a hearing the Supreme Court in People v. Keyes et al., 284 P. 1105, held that, although the defendant Keyes was improperly charged with having conspired with other defendants to give and offer a bribe, and although it was held that there is "no room for the operation of a charge of conspiracy" as between the person who asks and one who offers a bribe because "bribery requires for its consummation the unlawful concert of one or more persons acting with one or more other persons having a different motive or purpose," still under such an indictment, and that particular indictment, in view of the existence in said indictment No. 35361 of allegations showing an unlawful and felonious agreement on the part of Keyes to accept a bribe, the defendant Keyes was legally convicted of the substantive offense of accepting a bribe from the other defendants. It follows that this petitioner, one of the defendants in the last-mentioned indictment, might have been convicted of the substantive offense of bribery under the allegations which were ample in charging an unlawful and felonious agreement upon his part to give and offer the same bribe charged as a substantive offense in indictment No. 35227. In view of the language of the Supreme Court to which we have adverted, it is unnecessary and inappropriate to consider other authorities cited in argument and apparently relied upon by the trial court.

It is ordered that the petitioner be discharged.

Ex parte GETZOFF.
Cr. 1942.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

March 1, 1930.

1. Criminal law §296 — Plea of double jeopardy — Right to immediate decision.

Petitioner seeking release from charge of bribery, interposing plea of double jeopardy and prior conviction, was entitled to immediate ruling.

2. Criminal law §878(2) — Charging several acts in indictment — General verdict.

Mere general verdict of guilty is finding that defendant is guilty of each and all of unlawful acts charged in indictment.

3. Criminal law §200(6) — Indictment for conspiracy to bribe — Subsequent indictment for bribery — Double jeopardy.

After dismissal of indictment for conspiracy to bribe, in language adequate to charge bribery, subsequent indictment for bribery constituted double jeopardy.

Application by Ben Getzoff for a writ of habeas corpus against the Sheriff of Los Angeles County to secure release of petitioner, being detained in custody upon a charge of bribery.

Petitioner discharged.

Mark F. Jones and G. J. Opegard, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and Robert P. Stewart and Wm. R. McKay, Deputy Dist. Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J.

[1, 2] The situation here presented is the same as that this day passed upon by this court in Re Berman, 286 P. 1043, except that the plea interposed and upon which the motion to dismiss was made and denied was double jeopardy and a prior conviction of the offense charged in indictment No. 35227. As in the other case, the defendant was then entitled to a ruling upon his motion to dismiss. Where, as was the case in the trial of the charge contained in indictment No. 35361, a general verdict of guilty is rendered, and no special verdict returned by the jury to indicate the exact offense of which the defendant is convicted, such verdict is a finding that the defendant is guilty of each and all of the unlawful acts charged in the indictment. People v. Gayle, 202 Cal. 159, 259 P. 750.

[3] Under the decision of the Supreme Court in People v. Keyes et al., 284 P. 1105, the conviction of Getzoff, like that of Keyes, could have been sustained as one of the substantive offenses charged in indictment No. 35361, which was set up as one of the overt acts in the charge of conspiracy, but sufficiently pleaded to show an unlawful and felonious offer and gift of a bribe.

We think the plea should have been sustained, and the petitioner is ordered released.

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Petition by Winnie Gilmore Louden against the Industrial Accident Commission of California and another, for an order annulling an award made in determining the dependents of John Louden, deceased.

Award annulled, and cause remanded.

Eugene S. Salvage, of Eureka, for petitioner.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J.

This cause is before us upon the petition of the above named, praying for an order of this court annulling the award heretofore made in determining the dependents of John Louden, deceased.

The facts show that John Louden, an Indian, 47 years of age, while employed by the respondent Pacific Lumber Company, a corporation, was killed on or about the 27th day of March, 1928; that his death occurred in the course of and arose out of his employment. The respondent lumber company was self-insured, and both employer and employee were subject to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended). The award of the Commission was to the effect that five minor children of the deceased were his sole dependents and entitled to share in the death benefit, found to be the sum of $5,000. Finding No. 4 of the Commission, affecting the petitioner herein, is as follows: "4. Winnie Gilmore Louden was not the wife of said employee on said date, and was not dependent on the decedent within the meaning of said act." The minor children above referred to were the children of a wife of the decedent from whom he had been divorced, and, so far as the record shows, were being wholly supported and educated in an Indian school maintained by the United States government. The deceased contributed practically nothing to the support of the minor children, the testimony showing that for the year previous to his decease only the sum of $20 was contributed by the deceased for such purpose. A rehearing was granted by the Commission, and in the petition for rehearing the question as to the petitioner's marriage and being a member of the household of the deceased in good faith was tendered by the following allegation contained in the petition, to wit: "That the evidence does not justify the findings of fact, and in this regard your petitioner alleges that she was married to John Louden under the customs and laws of Indians living in the county of Humboldt, state of California, and was in good faith a member of the household of said John Louden, the deceased employee of the defendant company." The rehearing resulted in an affirmation of the Commission's previous award.

The record further shows that the petitioner was a member of the Humboldt Tribe of Indians, which resides in and about the bay, in Humboldt county; that the deceased, John Louden, was a member of the Siskiyou Tribe of Indians; that both the petitioner and the deceased spent most of their time in and about the city of Eureka, and without any distinct tribal associations, though their association, so far as shown, was with other Indians living in and about the city of Eureka. The record further shows that the petitioner herein was first married in January, 1897, to a white man named Richard Rossig. This marriage appears to have been solemnized first in the "Indian way" and then according to the method prescribed by the Civil Code, in taking out a license and having a ceremony performed by a justice of the peace. In the year 1901 the petitioner obtained a decree of divorce from Richard Rossig in the superior court of Humboldt county, and for some years after the obtaining of this divorce it appears that the petitioner lived with an Indian aunt in or near the city of Eureka and participated in Indian tribal relations only to a very limited extent.

The record shows, as we have stated, that John Louden was married to a woman other than the petitioner in what was called the "white man's way," and that a decree of divorce had been entered years previous to his death, dissolving said marriage. On March 16, 1925, the petitioner and John Louden were married "Indian way." This consisted of John Louden paying to the aunt of the petitioner the sum of $150 and placing a ring upon one of the fingers of the petitioner, and thereafter the two lived together as husband and wife. The petitioner testified that in her first marriage she was married "Indian way," and as she had married a white man who wanted the marriage solemnized according to the white man's method, a license was obtained and a ceremony performed by a justice of the peace, as herein stated.

The record contains a great deal of testimony to the effect that members of the two Indian tribes referred to considered marriages performed "Indian way" just as binding and effective as marriages solemnized "white man's way." The record contains much testimony to the effect that the neighbors and friends of the deceased and the petitioner considered them husband and wife, and some testimony to the effect that the deceased had said he was not married to the petitioner, and also that the petitioner had said that the deceased was not her husband, but was "her man." This testimony, however, quoting deceased, was given by a witness who apparently had a personal grudge against the petitioner.

The record likewise shows that the deceased and the petitioner, for at least twenty-five years, had lived among white people, worked for them in such employment as could be obtained, and were familiar with the customs of white people in relation to contracting marriages.

Based upon these facts, the Commission found that the petitioner was not the wife of the deceased, and was not a dependent within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Upon finding No. 4, set out herein, it is contended by counsel for respondents that the Commission has determined that the petitioner not only was not the wife of John Louden, deceased, but was not a member of his household in good faith within the meaning of the language contained in subdivision

(c) of section 14 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, St. 1917, p. 844, as amended by St. 1919, p. 917, § 5. In other words, that the following language, "and was not dependent on the deceased, within the meaning of said act," includes, by way of implication, a finding or conclusion to the effect that petitioner was not in good faith a member of the household of the decedent.

It may be here stated that the record shows beyond contradiction that from the date of the marriage, "Indian way," of the deceased and the petitioner, the petitioner maintained a residence in which the two lived together, and that the deceased paid all the expenses of the household, and that the petitioner was, in fact, dependent upon the deceased for her maintenance during said period of time and at the date of the death of the deceased. The question of good faith as to the relationship between the petitioner and the deceased being practically the only fact for determination.

The authorities cited by counsel for the petitioner show that the decisions of courts are almost unanimous in supporting marriages between Indians solemnized "Indian way," notwithstanding the fact that departmental officers of the government having to do with the affairs of Indian reservations and with Indians coming under their jurisdiction have sought, by rules and regulations, to discourage and prevent such marriages, and that such marriages are becoming less and less frequent.

Counsel for petitioner calls our attention to the case of Temescal Rock Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 180 Cal. 637, 182 P. 447, 13 A. L. R. 683, wherein it is held, in substance that the actual legality of the assumed marital relation does not determine whether a woman is or is not embraced within subdivision (c) of section 14 of the Workmen's Compensation Act; that if the marriage was not legally solemnized, but if the parties in good faith assumed the relationship of husband and wife under the conviction that they were married, that the woman, in such instance, should be considered in good faith a member of the household of the deceased and entitled to compensation.

To the same effect, though involving minors, is the case of Moore Shipbuilding Corp. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 185 Cal. 200, 196 P. 257, 13 A. L. R. 676. As opposed to these cases, counsel for respondent cites the case of Francisco v. Industrial Accident Commission, 192 Cal. 635, 221 P. 373. That case appears to be based upon the decision in Anderson v. Mathews, 174 Cal. 537, 163 P. 902, where an Indian was involved who was not a member of any known or recognized tribe having communal laws, customs, or institutions of its own, etc. The Indian involved having conformed his ways of living to the habits of American citizens, married according to the white man's laws, and, living among them, was held subject to the laws relating to the statute of limitations, the same as any other person. The question of good faith, however, which is involved in this action, does not appear to have been considered therein, and therefore is not an authority against the contentions of the petitioner.

[1-3] If the question of wifehood only had been involved in the issues presented to the Commission, then the finding of the Commission that the petitioner, Winnie Gilmore Loudon, was not the wife of the employee at the date of his death would be determinative of this case, but as the issue of good faith also was involved, the petitioner was entitled to a definite finding upon that fact. Counsel for the Commission advances the argument that this question, by implication, has been decided by the Commission. Our attention in this behalf is again called to finding No. 4, which reads: "Winnie Gilmore Loudon was not the wife of said employee on said date, and was not dependent on the decedent within the meaning of said act." The contention being that by this language the Commission has found that the petitioner, having been married only "Indian way," was not the wife of the decedent, and that the words "was not dependent on the decedent," within the meaning of said act, may, by implication, be construed as a finding that the petitioner was not in good faith a member of the household of the decedent at the time of his death.

As against this interpretation of the finding it is just as consistent to read it with the interpretation contended for by the petitioner, to wit: "Winnie Gilmore Loudon was not the wife of said employee on said date, and, therefore, was not dependent on the decedent within the meaning of said act." We do not very well perceive how the conclusion in the finding can be separated from the premise upon which it is based, to wit: "That Winnie Gilmore Loudon was not the wife of the employee on said date." That is the burden of the finding. The remaining portion of the finding is a part of the same sentence, is connected therewith in thought, and to separate the conclusion from the statement upon which it is based appears to us to do violence to all rules of construction adopted by courts, and we must conclude that finding No. 4 must be read as a whole, and to the effect that the petitioner was not a dependent on the decedent within the meaning of the act, because she was not the wife of the decedent at the time of his death. Counsel for the Commission admit the marriage "Indian way"; that the decedent and the petitioner lived together thereafter until the date of John Loudon's death, and during all of said time John Loudon provided a home for the petitioner, paid all bills, and that the petitioner was dependent in fact upon the decedent for support. The whole theory of the findings of the Commission and the argument of counsel is to the effect that as the parties involved knew of the "white man's way" of contracting marriage, therefore it was necessary for them to be married "white man's way." On the contrary, the cases which we have cited show that if the marriage, though not performed "white man's way," is entered into in good faith, and the testimony in this case is overwhelming that Indians regard their own way of marriage as binding as "white man's way," there remains no basis upon which to predicate either a finding or a conclusion of lack of good faith, and if the marriage between the petitioner and the decedent, "Indian way," was in good faith, then the petitioner was entitled to her share of the award.

It is true that the first clause of subdivision (c) of section 67 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 876) reads: "The findings and conclusions of the Commission on questions of fact shall be conclusive and final and shall not be subject to review."

In Clarke v. Industrial Accident Commission, 87 Cal. App. 766, 262 P. 471, the court had before it a finding of the commission which was in the form of a conclusion, and it was there held that a conclusion by the Industrial Accident Commission as to "serious and willful misconduct of employers constitutes a finding of fact not subject to review, if supported by substantial evidence," citing Myers v. Industrial Accident Commission, 191 Cal. 673, 218 P. 11. To the same effect is the case of General Petroleum Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, 90 Cal. App. 101, 265 P. 508.

It also appears to be the law that whatever is implied within the terms of the findings and conclusions of the Commission may be considered in supporting an award. Standard Varnish Works v. Industrial Accident Commission, 197 Cal. 143, 239 P. 1067. While we recognize the force of these cases, they are not applicable to the questions here presented, because there is in the record no specific conclusion that the petitioner was not in good faith a member of the household of the decedent. This vital fact, upon which the right of the petitioner depends, cannot be said to be within the findings of the Commission or the conclusions of the Commission only by importing into a finding something which is not there or only by dividing a conclusion from the premise upon which it is founded, and dividing a sentence into two portions, so as to make it cover two issues instead of one, which we think only was within the mind of the Commission at the time it made finding No. 4. The whole record, as we read it, indicates the fairness of the petitioner's claims and her right, though an Indian woman, to be regarded as occupying the same status of a white woman whose marriage ceremony was in some particulars defective but entered into in good faith. At least the petitioner is entitled to such a finding, as her rights depend thereon, and not upon whether she was or was not, technically speaking, the wife of the decedent.

The award of the Commission is annulled, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

BARNARD, J.

This was an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff, as a result of overexposure in the taking of dental X-ray photographs of the plaintiff, by the defendant. From a judgment for $10,250, based upon the verdict of a jury, the defendant has appealed.

The sole ground of the appeal is that the amount of the verdict, in view of the injuries sustained, is grossly excessive, and suggests passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. The plaintiff testified that, as a result of the burns in question, she suffered torture, the terrible suffering lasting for three months, during which time she was unable to sleep "without they gave me something," that she spent most of the first three months in bed, and that at the time of the trial, something over a year after the burns, she was still extremely nervous. In reply to the question whether she still had very much pain, she replied: "Well, I am suffering—I am just so awfully nervous, there is a tingling sensation in my face." She also gave the following testimony:

"Q. Have you noticed any changed condition in your eyes? A. A decided change in my eyes.

"Q. What kind of a change? A. It was about—it must have been three weeks after the burn, my eyelids began to draw, the under lids began to draw away from the eyes, and my eyelids turned wrong side outward, I was blinded, and that was when they called Dr. Thomas in, and he put me in a dark room, put goggles on and a shade over my eyes, and kept medicine in my eyes constantly, trying to keep my eyelids from turning wrong side out and leaving the eyeballs, and I have never been able to see well since."

One physician testified he examined the plaintiff shortly after the burns were inflicted and again a few days before the trial. He describes her condition the first time he saw her as follows: "Her face was red, a dark purple red, around both the upper and the lower jaw, it was swollen, and her right eye was swollen and the skin around it was swollen, also the skin on her neck on both sides was thickened and swollen and a dusky red."

In respect to her condition just before the trial, he testified as follows:

"Q. What did you discover her condition to be at that time? A. Well, her original X-ray reaction had disappeared, and in place of it there are the usual sequeli that follow. She had an atrophy of the skin, that is shrinking and toughening and shriveling of the skin over her right cheek, she had tanning on her neck on both sides, tanning of her skin over her lower jaw and the little blood vessels springing up all over the end of her nose in the atrophied area in her right cheek.

"Q. Would you say this condition was the result of the X-ray burn? A. As a result of over X-ray exposure, yes.

"Q. How long would you say that condition would continue with her? A. These are probably permanent things. The tanning may fade somewhat, the atrophy will stay, the blood vessels—the new blood vessels may increase somewhat in size, the blotching of her right cheek may increase somewhat in the next few months."

When asked if she would continue to suffer pain, he replied: "Well, she will be hypersensitive to sunburn, she will be hypersensitive to the steam in her kitchen, and things of that sort, her skin will burn up and tingle and make her uncomfortable, I do not say it will cause her pain."

In regard to her nervous condition, he testified that the plaintiff had passed through the shock of from two to three months of severe pain and suffering, and to that extent she had diminished her nervous reserve, and that in his opinion this X-ray burn could of itself cause her nervous condition, although at another time he testified that her nervous condition was in part contributed to by another factor, not connected with the burns in question.

Another physician testified that he treated the plaintiff during a period of a little more than three months following the taking of the last X-ray picture. In reference to her condition at first, he testified as follows:

"The face was badly swollen, red, livid color, almost cyanotic—it was cyanotic.

"The Court: What do you mean by that? A. Black—a very dark red. What I mean by cyanosis, Judge, is more of a congestion of the skin, and she was suffering acutely.

"Q. And how long did you continue to treat her? A. Well, I saw Mrs. Coover—the last time that I saw Mrs. Coover was the last of July, the 30th of July. * * *

"Q. What was her condition during that interval? A. Well, for days she suffered very, very acutely, as they do from X-ray burns. There is no dermatological condition in which one suffers more than they do from an X-ray dermatitis or an X-ray burn, and there is very little which you can do to alleviate that. About the second or third day after I first saw Mrs. Coover, her face blistered, some blistering, these blisters ruptured, leaving a necrotic base.

"Q. What do you mean by that, Doctor? Necrotic base, did you say? A. Yes, the tissues were dead, the blood vessels were cut off, the superficial blood vessels were cut off."

In reference to her condition on the day of the trial, he testified as follows:

"Q. And what condition is it in today, Doctor? A. Over the areas that ulcerated, that is, they broke down and were necrotic, shows a senile condition of the skin. * * *

"A. It is on the right side, it is in here, extending up to the border of the hair, and there is some little loss of hair in that area, then down, up to the corner of the eye the skin is soft and of a deadwhite color. When you get a senile condition of the skin following an X-ray burn, the hair follicles and sebaceous follicles are destroyed. The light has destroyed these hair follicles—you have a skin that is not functioning and our medical literature is full of cases of cancer—carcinoma that have developed upon a senile skin following an X-ray burn.

"Q. You give your professional opinion to the effect that Mrs. Coover at this time might be in danger of a cancerous growth? A. I do not say that she has a cancerous growth, she has not, but a cancer may develop on this area—it is common."

He also testified:

"Q. Her face is slightly scarred at this time? A. Yes.

"Q. Will that be permanent? A. That will be permanent, and there may possibly be some further changes in the skin. On this senile skin not infrequently develops new growths, little neoplasm, warty growths, and from these warty growths, the carcinoma develops; sometimes that is a year, sometimes it is two years—sometimes it is three or four years before they develop."

He also testified that over the area affected the plaintiff has a skin that is predisposed to cancer, that she had some disturbance with the sensory nerves of her face, and then:

"Q. In the event the sensory nerves have been destroyed, in this portion of the face that is burned or impaired, what would be the natural consequence of such a condition. In other words, what effect would that have on Mrs. Coover? A. The most important sequela from a dermatological standpoint is the possibility of carcinoma—of a cancer."

In reply to questions by the court, he testified as follows:

"Q. I had more particular reference to the possibility of developing cancer. A. You say does it always? Not always.

"Q. It may happen that she can go on through life without that occurring, I suppose? A. It is possible, but we do find many times, carcinoma developing upon the scars of X-ray burns, in all of our literature they speak of that as very, very likely sequela, it is the thing to be guarded against and to be watched."

The plaintiff's husband testified as follows:

"Q. What have you noticed as to her nervous temperament or disposition since the X-ray burn? A. So much so that at night when she would retire possibly around seven o'clock for the last fourteen or fifteen months, it would be twelve probably, to one or two o'clock in the morning before she would doze off at all, then at times she would wake up from the rest of the night with the movement of her arms, or twitching of her limbs to such extent it would wake her up again.

"Q. Does that condition continue down to this time? A. Even until last night."

[1] While there was evidence that the plaintiff's nervousness could have been caused by the X-ray burns and other evidence that the same may have been otherwise contributed to in part, any conflict arising therefrom was for the jury, and, if that was considered at all in arriving at the verdict, it could not be disturbed on appeal.

Appellant argues that the evidence as to the possibility of cancer is wholly conjectural and uncertain, and that that element could not have rightfully been considered by the jury. The court instructed the jury that they were to consider as elements of damage only such physical injury as they may find the plaintiff is certain to suffer in the near future. If we assume that respondent's skin condition was considered by the jury, it by no means follows that this was improper. While the actual condition of cancer may have been conjectural and uncertain, the record contains positive evidence that a condition actually exists which makes this dread disease much more likely. We think this predisposition in itself is some damage, and, when caused by the wrongful act of another, it is an interference with the normal and natural conditions and rights of the other, which must be held to be a real and not a fanciful element of damage. The necessity of constantly watching and guarding against cancer, as testified to by the physician, is an obligation and a burden that the defendant had no right to inflict upon the plaintiff.

The appellant further argues that the evidence shows the disfiguration of the plaintiff was slight. While it is true that one witness replied in the affirmative to the question, "Her face is slightly scarred at this time?" the other evidence above referred to is to the contrary, and we cannot hold, in the face of such other evidence, that the scar and disfiguration were not of considerable proportions. Not only was the conflict in the evidence one for the jury to decide, but the best evidence was before them. While the plaintiff is married and forty-five years of age, it does not follow that such disfiguration is not a material element in the damage she suffered. While advancing years, in spite of some other compensation, bring a change in the fact, and perhaps in the relative importance, of the appearance of the natural features, even a person of middle age has a substantial right not to have this change hastened or aggravated by the wrongful act of another, and especially so when the result amounts to an actual disfiguration.

[2, 3] In the case of Kelley v. Hodge Transportation System, 197 Cal. 598, 242 P. 76, 81, the rule is set forth as follows: "Unless we are able to say that the award of damages made by the jury and sustained by the trial court were grossly disproportionate to any compensation reasonably warranted by the facts as presented to us on appeal as to shock the sense of justice and raise at once a presumption that it was the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption, rather than an honest and sober judgment, this court may not exercise the power of revision. 8 Cal. Jur. 834; Holmes v. California Crushed Fruit Co., 69 Cal. App. 779, 232 P. 178; Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513."

From the record before us we are unable to say that the amount of the verdict is such as to shock the sense of justice, or to raise any presumption that the same was the result of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

2. Corporations $\S$ 80(11) — Corporation's agent — Evidence — Sufficiency — Sale of stock.

Jury was warranted in finding person inducing sale of stock who appeared with dividend check following letter from corporation was company's agent.

The letter from the company stated that the dividend check would be delivered by representative who would not only deliver the check but would tell the defendant of the success of the company.

3. Corporations $\S$ 80(5) — Sale of stock — Representation of fact — Future dividends.

Representation of corporation's agent selling stock that corporation on following

February would declare 15 per cent. dividend constituted representation of fact.

The statement that there would be second dividend of 15 per cent. in three months after a 4 per cent. dividend had been declared implied that the speaker was in possession of knowledge on which to base his assertion, and, if believed, constituted a persuasive selling point, and plaintiff, suing on note given for the price of the stock, should not be permitted to avoid defense of fraud on ground that statement was merely a promise.

4. Fraud ⇨12 — Representations — As to future — Speaker's knowledge.

Liability for fraud may be based on statements relating to future intended and accepted as representations of fact and involving matters peculiarly within speaker's knowledge.

Action by H. W. Smith, Inc., against P. J. Swenson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Fabian D. Brown, of San Francisco, for appellant.

George F. Jones, of Oroville, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J.

The plaintiff brought this action to recover the amount of three promissory notes given by the defendant to the A. Meister Sons Company in part payment of the purchase price of 30 shares of the capital stock of that company. The only defense relied on by the defendant is that he was induced to purchase the stock by fraudulent representations made to him by the company and its agent, John Blackburn. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed.

[1] The trial court submitted special issues to the jury, but no general verdict was returned. Appellant contends that this was error. The plaintiff did not demand a jury. At the beginning of the trial, the court announced that only special issues would be submitted to the jury. Neither party made any objection to the procedure announced, and therefore it must be held that the objection here urged by the appellant was waived by the plaintiff's acquiescence at the trial. Dyer Bros. G. W. I. Wks. v. Central I. Wks., 72 Cal. App. 202, 205, 237 P. 386. The special issues seem to cover all matters in controversy, and therefore the plaintiff's rights were in no manner prejudiced by the course pursued.

[2] It is urged that there is no proof that Blackburn was the agent of the company. In the early part of December, 1922, the defendant, who then owned 15 shares of the capital stock, received a letter from the company containing, among other statements, the following:

"Your dividend check will be delivered to you by my personal representative, whom I am sending not only to deliver to you your check, but to tell you the 'How and Why' of the success of your company. * * * Your board of directors are about to take under consideration the matter of increasing our shares from a price of $100 per share to a price of $125 per share. This action is due to the profits earned as well as to the increase in assets in the form of future work already contracted for. * * * This advance in price would be very beneficial to your present holdings and we want you to be fully advised relative to same."

A few days after the receipt of this letter by the defendant, Blackburn appeared with the defendant's dividend check, and induced him to purchase the stock involved in this action. The company accepted the defendant's promissory notes, and issued the stock which Blackburn had sold to him, but the stock was not delivered. There is no substantial contradiction of the foregoing evidence relating to Blackburn's authority, and the logical inference therefrom is that he was the authorized agent of the company. Certainly such evidence warrants an inference of ostensible agency.

The jury found that Blackburn fraudulently represented to the defendant "that The A. Meister Sons Company was doing a tremendous business and that said company had the money available to do so and would declare a 15 per cent. dividend on its capital stock in February, 1923." The court adopted the findings of the jury and made additional findings, one of which is that Blackburn represented "that in February, 1923, there was to be a special dividend declared." There is not sufficient evidence to sustain the finding that the company was not doing a tremendous business, but there is ample evidence to show that Blackburn represented that the company "would declare a 15 per cent. dividend * * * in February, 1923," and that such representation was untrue. The defendant testified that Blackburn said that such dividend "was already voted," and that "it was to be declared in February." It is unnecessary to consider the technical distinction, if any, between "voting" a dividend and "declaring" one. The plain inference from the representation in question is that the company had definitely decided to declare a dividend of 15 per cent. in February, 1923. The evidence shows that the board of directors of the company, at its meeting in November, 1922, discussed the question of declaring a dividend in February, 1923, but came to no conclusion in the matter, and that at the February meeting it was decided not to declare a dividend. The only dividend the stockholders ever received was the one declared at the meeting of the board in November, 1922, the defendant's share of which was represented by the check in Blackburn's possession when he sold the 30 shares of stock to the defendant.

[3, 4] Appellant contends that Blackburn's statement to the defendant was a "promissory representation rather than a statement of fact." The representation, however, related to matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the company and of which the defendant was without knowledge. The statement that there would be a second dividend of 15 per cent. in three months after the one of 4 per cent. had been declared implied that the speaker was in possession of knowledge upon which to base the assertion, and, if believed, constituted a persuasive selling point, as it was doubtless intended. It is a matter of daily observation that the publication of a statement that a corporation will, at a stated future time, declare a large dividend is accepted by the buying public as the statement of a fact, and results in a great increase in sales of the corporation's capital stock. Such a statement is designed to create the belief that it is based upon facts within the knowledge of the person making it, and, after he has accomplished the designed purpose, he ought not to be permitted to escape liability on the mere ground that his fraudulent statement is not a representation of fact. "The fact that statements relate to the future will not preclude liability for fraud if such statements were intended and accepted as representations of fact and involved a matter peculiarly within the speaker's knowledge." 26 C. J. 1090. The representation under consideration is similar in principle to that involved in California C. & C. Corp. v. Carpenter, 77 Cal. App. 18, 28, 246 P. 126, 130, wherein it is said that the representation that a packing plant would be located at Sacramento was "the representation of a material existing fact—the fact that the determination had then been fixed upon by the packing company to establish a packing house and stockyards at Sacramento." See, also, Russ Lumber & Mill Co. v. Muscupiabe Land & Water Co., 120 Cal. 521, 529, 52 P. 995, 65 Am. St. Rep. 186, and California Credit, etc., Corp. v. Goodin, 76 Cal. App. 785, 796, 246 P. 121. The rule to be applied in a case such as this is analogous to that applicable where the issue is whether a given statement is a representation of fact or a mere expression of opinion. "It is the general and well-settled rule that, when a representation concerning the subject-matter of a transaction which might, ordinarily, be only the expression of an opinion is asserted as an existing fact, material to the transaction, and which has a reasonable tendency to induce one of the parties to the transaction to consider and rely upon such representation as a fact, the statement then becomes an assertion of an existing fact within the meaning of the general rule as to fraudulent representations." Harris v. Miller, 196 Cal. 8, 13, 235 P. 981, 983; Neff v. Engler (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 744; Antognini v. Grandi Co., 89 Cal. App. 628, 643, 265 P. 378; Davis v. Monte, 81 Cal. App. 164, 171, 253 P. 352; Haserot v. Keller, 67 Cal. App. 659, 670, 228 P. 383.

[5] Appellant contends that the defendant has been guilty of such laches as to bar his right to set up the defense of fraudulent representations. The contention is without merit. Neff v. Engler, supra; J. B. Colt Co. v. Freitas, 76 Cal. App. 278, 287, 244 P. 916.

[6] June 26, 1924, the A. Meister Sons Company was adjudged a bankrupt. Thereafter the trustee in bankruptcy sold all the assets of the company to Feigenberg Bros. Feigenberg Bros. assigned the promissory notes in suit to C. R. Woodruff, who was assistant to the president of the company at the time the notes were executed. Woodruff assigned the notes to the plaintiff for collection. Over the plaintiff's objection, the court admitted evidence to the effect that Woodruff had assigned the notes to the plaintiff for collection on a percentage of "fifty-fifty." Appellant urges that it was error to admit such evidence. Woodruff was an important witness in the case, and it was material to show that he was financially interested in the outcome of the suit.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. Depositions $\S$ 19 — Manner of taking — Nonresidents — Determination by trial court.

Under statutes, trial court could determine that depositions of nonresident witnesses, which plaintiff sought to have taken upon oral interrogatories, should instead be taken upon written interrogatories (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ § 2024, 2025, 2025½).

Mandamus proceeding by Arthur Hopkins against the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco and another, to compel respondent court to make an order directing that certain depositions of witnesses be taken upon oral interrogatories.

Morris M. Grupp, of San Francisco, and John A. Deweese, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, P. J.

This is an original proceeding in mandamus to require respondent superior court to make its order directing that certain depositions of witnesses be taken in the state of New York upon oral interrogatories.

Petitioner herein is plaintiff in an action pending before the respondent superior court in which action the respondent Woodward has appeared as one of the defendants. The plaintiff in said action gave to the defendant notice of his motion that the deposition of plaintiff and of one Lyons be taken in the city of New York upon oral interrogatories. Attached to the notice of motion was an affidavit in which the affiant gave as his opinion that these depositions could only be satisfactorily obtained through the use of oral interrogatories. Objections were filed on behalf of defendant Woodward showing that, by reason of a temporary restraining order obtained by the plaintiff in the action pending, the defendant had become insolvent and was without means to employ counsel in the city of New York to attend the taking of the depositions. Other facts were stated which tended to show that the depositions might be taken by written interrogatories without prejudice to the plaintiff. After a full hearing upon the motion, the respondent court made its order that the depositions of these witnesses should be taken upon written interrogatories.

The question presented in this proceeding is whether the superior court has jurisdiction to determine in each particular case whether a deposition of a nonresident witness should be taken upon written interrogatories or upon oral examination. Section 2024, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that a deposition of a witness out of the state may be taken upon a commission issued by the court upon an order of the court on the application of either party upon five days' previous notice to the other. Section 2025, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that the party moving for the commission must attach to the notice of motion the interrogatories upon which he desires it to be taken, unless this is waived by the other party. Provision for the filing of cross-interrogatories and the settlement by the court follow, and the section concludes with: "When agreed upon or settled, the interrogatories must be annexed to the commission; or, when the parties agree to that mode, or the court on the application of either party, after a hearing had upon two days' notice to the opposite party, so directs, the examination must be without written interrogatories." Section 2025½ provides that when a party shall desire to take the evidence of a nonresident witness he "may have a commission directed in the same manner as provided in section two thousand and twenty-four, Code of Civil Procedure, to take such evidence, upon interrogatories to be propounded to the witness orally."

Section 2025½ was added in 1903. At the time this section was enacted the preceding section read (following provisions relating to the settlement of written interrogatories), "or, when the parties agree to that mode, * * * the examination must be without written interrogatories." It will be noted that when section 2025½ was enacted there was no provision of the Code authorizing the trial court to direct the taking of a deposition without written interrogatories, unless such method was agreed to by the parties in the action. However, by amendment approved in 1907, the Legislature changed the provisions of section 2025 by expressly giving to the court "on the application of either party" the power to direct examination to be without written interrogatories.

[1, 2] Following the well-accepted rule that all sections of the Code are to be read in harmony when possible, and that if there be any conflict in these sections the one later in enactment shall control, we conclude that the clear purpose of the Legislature, in the matter of taking depositions of nonresident witnesses, is that either party may initiate a proceeding for the taking of a deposition of such a witness either upon written interrogatories or upon oral examination, but that in either case the trial court is vested with the discretion, after a hearing as provided in section 2025, to direct the mode in which the examination is to be taken. Here the only apparent conflict between the two sections would arise by reading the word "may" in section 2025½ as "must," so that the section would provide that whenever either party requested it the court must direct a commission upon oral examination no matter what the circumstances of the case might be. But it is not necessary that we thus alter the expression used by the Legislature in order to create a conflict between the two sections. Reading the section as enacted, it means that either party may move that such a commission be issued and that after a hearing as provided in section 2025, if the court so directs, then such examination must be without written interrogatories.

As we conclude that the trial court had jurisdiction to determine in what manner the examination was to be held, it is unnecessary to consider other points discussed in the briefs, because we are satisfied upon this record that the discretion imposed in the trial court has not been abused.

The writ is denied.

Application for writ of prohibition by J. P. Morgan, directed to the Superior Court in and for Kings County and another.

Writ granted.

A. C. McClellan, of Corcoran, for petitioner.

Clarence H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BARNARD, Acting P. J.

This is a petition for a writ of prohibition. The petition and the answer show the following facts: On September 17, 1929, an action was commenced in the justice's court of Corcoran township, in the county of Kings, to collect $95.25 from the defendant, the petitioner herein. A writ of attachment was issued and levied by the constable upon a crop of growing cotton belonging to said defendant. The action was tried on November 12, 1929, and at that time the justice of the peace orally stated that he would give judgment for the plaintiff, who was then present in court with his attorney. It does not appear when the judgment was actually entered.

Prior to the trial of the action, the plaintiff, acting for the constable, harvested the crop of cotton, which amounted to eight bales. On October 25, 1929, the justice's court made an order releasing from the attachment four bales of said cotton, which were turned over to the defendant without his paying any part of the cost of picking, ginning, hauling, and baling the same. On November 20, 1929, plaintiff's attorney wrote a letter to the justice of the peace, stating that his costs were $6.75. On November 21, an execution was issued, and on November 22 the defendant in said action deposited in said court the sum of $105.54, covering the amount of the judgment and costs. On November 27, 1929, the plaintiff filed a motion to modify said judgment and quash the execution issued, in order to have said judgment include as costs the sum of $273.54, in lieu of the $6.75, it being claimed that this additional amount was spent by him, under the direction of the constable, in harvesting, ginning, and baling said crop of cotton. Said motion was heard in the justice's court, and was denied on December 26, 1929. On the same day, plaintiff served and filed notice of appeal, with the requisite bond. Thereafter, in the superior court of Kings county, petitioner herein, being the defendant in said action, moved to dismiss said appeal on the ground that the same had not been taken within thirty days after notice of rendition of said judgment. Said motion was denied, and the plaintiff in said action then filed a notice of motion to set said cause for trial de novo. Petitioner is now seeking a writ of prohibition to prevent said superior court from proceeding with the trial of said action.

[1] Section 974 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it now reads, provides that any party dissatisfied with the judgment rendered in a civil action in a justice's court may appeal therefrom at any time within thirty days after notice of the rendition of the judgment. Section 893 of the same Code provides that such judgment shall have no effect for any purpose until it is entered by the justice of the peace, and notice of the rendition of the judgment must be given to the parties in writing, signed by the justice. It is the general rule that, where a written notice is thus required by statute, it must be given, unless it has been waived by the party entitled to claim the benefits of this provision. Peterson v. Superior Court, 30 Cal. App. 466, 158 P. 547, 548; Mallory v. See, 129 Cal. 356, 61 P. 1123. In the case of Peterson v. Superior Court, just cited, it was held that, under section 859 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the time within which application must be made for the relief provided for in said section begins to run from the time of service of the written notice. This same ruling is followed in the case of Arbogast v. Superior Court, 32 Cal. App. 372, 162 P. 909. Section 974 of the Code of Civil Procedure was amended in 1921 by changing the time within which an appeal might be taken from thirty days after rendition of the judgment to thirty days after notice of the rendition of the judgment. The rule thus earlier established for a similar situation was applied by this amendment to the time within which an appeal may be taken from the judgment in a justice's court, and this time does not begin to run until notice is given of the rendition of the judgment.

[2-4] It is conceded by all parties that in the instant case no notice was given, as required by section 893 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Petitioner, however, contends that this notice was waived, since the plaintiff was present in court when the decision was announced; that the attorney for the plaintiff admitted knowledge of said judgment by filing a memorandum of costs, being the letter of November 20, 1929, above referred to; and, therefore that the notice of appeal filed on December 26, 1929, was too late. The oral statement of the court's decision in the presence of the plaintiff did not waive such notice. A judgment in the justice's court is not rendered until it is entered in the docket. Thomson v. Superior Court, 161 Cal. 329, 119 P. 98; Wright v. Superior Court, 57 Cal. App. 749, 207 P. 910. The plaintiff was entitled to written notice after the judgment was actually entered by the justice of the peace. Nor was this right waived by the letter of November 20, giving the amount of his costs. In the case of Hughes Mfg. Co. v. Elliott, 167 Cal. 494, 140 P. 17, 18, the court said:

"The rule is that, in order to deprive an appellant of his right to written notice of the entry of an order or judgment, there must be facts of record clearly indicating a waiver of such notice. In Mallory v. See, 129 Cal. 359, 61 P. 1124, after reviewing the cases in which the conduct of appellants had been held to constitute waiver, this court said: 'The rule would therefore seem to be that written notice of filing of decision is in all cases required, unless waived by facts appearing in the records, files, or minutes of the court; and it follows that actual notice or knowledge, other than written notice, is insufficient in any case unless it appears, from facts thus evidenced, that written notice was waived.'"

In the case of Nay v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. App. 443, 237 P. 566, 567, the court uses this language:

"It has been decided a number of times that, where the statute requires written notice, actual notice is not sufficient, but these cases, and a number of authorities which might be cited, show that, where a party entitled to a written notice files a notice of appeal, or some paper necessitating further proceedings in the action, such proceeding constitutes a waiver on his part of the giving of the notice prescribed by the statute."

As the court said in Peterson v. Superior Court, supra:

"It is perfectly clear that the information obtained by Goldstein and the defendants of the entry of the judgment cannot be held to have amounted to the transmission to them of actual knowledge of the entry of said judgment. The information was the result of a mere hearsay statement, and, while it was doubtless sufficient to put the parties on their guard or to start them on an investigation which would lead to actual knowledge of the fact of the entry of the judgment, it did not, as stated, constitute actual knowledge. Nor did the mere preparation and verification of the affidavits by which the defendants intended to support their motion to vacate the judgment upon such information involve a waiver of notice of the entry of the judgment. The mere preparation and verification of the affidavits did not constitute 'a written admission' of knowledge, nor a 'motion to the court or other proceeding with reference to the decision, which presumed knowledge that the decision had been made.' The only motion or proceeding from which knowledge by the defendants of the entry of judgment may be presumed was the motion or application to be relieved from the default. And it was only when that application was filed that the waiver occurred, and consequently the time within which the defendants were required to make their motion and ask the action of the court thereon began to run from the date of the filing of said application."

[5-7] Section 896 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the justice must include in the judgment the costs allowed by law to the prevailing party. Section 911 of the same Code provides that the justice must enter in his docket the judgment, which must specify the costs included therein. It cannot be held that in sending the amount of his costs to the justice on November 20, 1929, the plaintiff was doing anything other than furnishing information which might assist the justice in entering the amount of the judgment, and it cannot be assumed therefrom that he had knowledge that the judgment was entered, or that he waived the notice to which he was entitled. It does appear, however, that execution was issued on November 21, 1929. Section 901 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an execution may issue "on the application of the party entitled thereto." While the record does not show at whose request the execution was issued, under the statute the justice had the authority to issue the same only on the application of the plaintiff in that action. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, it must be assumed that the justice did his duty, and that the execution was legally issued. Having taken out the execution, the plaintiff knew of the judgment. Not only would this be actual notice, but the taking out of an execution is an act which necessarily presupposes knowledge of the entry of the judgment, as does the filing of a notice of appeal. See Hughes v. De Mund, 195 Cal. 242, 233 P. 94. Under the rules above set forth, the same must be held to be a waiver of the notice prescribed by the statute. The execution having been issued on November 21, 1929, the plaintiff had thirty days from that date within which to appeal. The appeal not having been taken within that time, it follows that the superior court has no jurisdiction to try the case.

We have reached this conclusion with reluctance, as the equities seem to favor the plaintiff in the original action. It was, however, incumbent upon him to comply with the positive rules of law, prescribing the time within which an appeal may be taken.

A peremptory writ of prohibition will issue as prayed for.

WYNNE v. WRIGHT.

Civ. 104.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 31, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1) — Review — Findings of trial court.

Judgment in favor of plaintiff would not be disturbed on appeal, if material evidence sustained findings of trial court.

2. Automobiles ⇨244(43) — Intersection collision — Contributory negligence.

Evidence held not to show that motorist suing for injuries struck at intersection by another approaching from right was contributorily negligent.

The evidence favorable to plaintiff motorist disclosed that he was proceeding at speed of not over fifteen miles an hour, at which speed he passed into intersection and that at time he entered intersection defendant motorist was approaching intersection at speed of from thirty-five to forty-five miles an hour, and there was nothing to obstruct plaintiff's view of defendant approaching one hundred and forty feet away from him.

3. Automobiles ⇨171(4) — Intersection — Right of way.

Under statute, motorist entering intersection when motorist on his right was 140 feet away from intersection traveling 35 miles per hour had right of way (California Vehicle Act, § 131).

California Vehicle Act, § 131 (St. 1925, p. 412), provides that, when two vehicles approach an intersection of public highways at approximately the same time, the vehicle approaching from the right shall have the right of way, provided such vehicle is traveling at a lawful speed.

4. Automobiles ⇨171(4) — Failure to yield right of way — Negligence per se.

Failure of motorist approaching from right at thirty-five to forty-five miles an hour to yield right of way to motorist in intersection would be negligence per se.

5. Automobiles ⇨244(35) — Intersection accident — Excessive speed — Negligence per se.

Motorist's speed of more than 40 miles per hour on city street at time of collision at intersection would be prima facie negligence per se.

6. Automobiles ⇨168(1) — Driving automobile — Failure to use due care.

Failure of motorist to see another in time to avoid accident did not excuse latter from statutory duty regarding driving automobile at proper speed (California Vehicle Act, § 113).

California Vehicle Act, § 113 (St. 1927, p. 1436), imposes duty on driver of automobile to drive at a careful and prudent speed and at such speed as not to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person.

7. Automobiles ⇨245(1) — Evidence — Weight and sufficiency — Question for trial court.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence held for trial court trying action for damages arising out of automobile collision without a jury.

8. Automobiles ⇨245(1) — Credibility — Question for trial court.

Credibility of witnesses held for trial court trying action for damages from automobile collision without a jury.

9. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1) — Review — Findings — Conflicting evidence.

Judgment based on conflicting evidence would not be disturbed on appeal, where supported by competent and material evidence.

MARKS, Acting P. J.

This is an action for damages to personal property arising out of a collision between two automobiles at the corner of Frankwood and Manning avenues in Fresno county, Cal., at about 5 o'clock in the evening of February 14, 1928. The case was tried before the court without jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $921.75. The sole question presented on this appeal is whether or not the evidence showed the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

[1] The trial court found in favor of the plaintiff and, therefore, if there is any material evidence in the record sustaining its findings, the judgment will not be disturbed here.

The Supreme Court has aptly stated the law of contributory negligence, governing here, in the case of Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513, 515, as follows:

"The law of this state is so well settled that it may be briefly summarized. Contributory negligence is a defense the burden of proving which rests upon defendant. Schneider v. Market St. Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 482, 66 P. 734; Hutson v. Southern California Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 701, 89 P. 1093. Therefore in this state it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff—as it is in certain other jurisdictions—to establish affirmatively that he was free from negligence. It is incumbent upon the defendant to establish the existence of his [plaintiff's] contributory negligence. Again, the question of whether or not a plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence is usually one of fact for the jury's verdict.

"It is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn by the jury from the evidence, that the court can say as a matter of law that contributory negligence is established. Even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one of fact for the jury." Johnson v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 154 Cal. 285, 97 P. 520; Seller v. Market-St. Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 72 P. 1006; Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 P. 651."

With these rules in mind we will summarize the evidence favorable to the plaintiff and to which we must look to support the judgment, if it is to be supported. That the evidence was conflicting must be admitted, but, as the trial court has resolved all conflicts in favor of the plaintiff, we do not need to lengthen this opinion with a discussion of them.

Plaintiff was an automobile dealer, and on the day of the accident had secured a new car in Fresno which he was driving to his place of business in Dinuba. He was proceeding south on Frankwood avenue, and as he approached the north line of Manning avenue he slowed his car to a speed of not over fifteen miles an hour, at which speed he passed into the intersection and to the point of the collision. At a point on the west half of Frankwood avenue south of the center line of Manning avenue his car was struck on its right-hand side by the defendant's automobile. As the plaintiff was approaching the intersection he looked in both directions, but did not see the defendant's car, and did not know of its approach until the collision. The defendant was approaching the intersection at a rate of speed variously estimated at from thirty-five to forty-five miles per hour. At a point on Manning avenue between forty and sixty feet west of the intersection, the defendant's wife called his attention to plaintiff's car. As to its position at this time, defendant himself testified as follows:

"Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Wright, Mr. Wynne was actually in the intersection when you first saw him? A. Well, I couldn't tell you definitely, it looked to me, when I first saw him—whether he was closer there or not, I absolutely—

"Q. Wasn't he actually in the intersection when you first saw him; not when your wife first spoke, but when you first saw him, wasn't he right there in front of you? A. Yes. Yes, he was, at the time I saw him."

There were skid marks upon the road made by the tires of defendant's car for about forty feet from the point of impact showing that he had applied his brakes for that distance. When the plaintiff was entering the intersection the defendant's car was about one hundred forty feet west of the point of the collision. At the point where plaintiff testified he looked up and down Manning avenue, there was nothing to obstruct his view of defendant's car, and there was nothing to obstruct the defendant's view of plaintiff's car for more than the last one hundred forty feet of its course before the accident. While the testimony was far from conclusive, it, with the physical facts appearing at the time of the accident, would support the trial court in concluding that the defendant was approaching the intersection at a speed of considerably more than forty miles per hour up to the point where he applied his brakes and partially checked his speed.

[2] Upon the facts which we have stated we are asked to hold that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law and cannot recover. The defendant invokes the doctrine that for one to look and fail to see that which is in sight is as neglectful as not to look at all. For the purpose of this decision, therefore, we will assume that when he was entering the intersection and looked, the plaintiff saw, or should have seen, the defendant's car one hundred and forty feet away from him, approaching from the west. Would this fact be sufficient to charge the plaintiff with contributory negligence? In other words, does the law require a person to stop his car upon reaching an intersection if he sees another automobile approaching from the right at a distance of one hundred forty feet away and permit such other car to pass, and, if he fails to stop, does he subject himself to the charge of contributing to an ensuing accident if the driver of the approaching car keeps on his course and runs the first car down? We do not believe that the law requires any such conduct. If such were the law, picture the condition at a busy intersection with traffic flowing in all directions. No one could enter the intersection without being guilty of contributory negligence.

Section 131 of the California Vehicle Act in effect at the time of this accident provided in part as follows: "When two vehicles approach an intersection of public highways at approximately the same time, the vehicle approaching from the right shall have the right of way, provided such vehicle is traveling at a lawful speed." St. 1925, p. 412.

[3-5] Under the language of this statute the plaintiff clearly had the right of way at this intersection. Lipp v. Moon (Cal. App.) 280 P. 710. While the plaintiff was exercising ordinary care in the operation of his car, he had the right to assume that the defendant would also use ordinary care to avoid an accident and would obey the law and yield the right of way at the intersection. Crabbe v. Rhoades (Cal. App.) 282 P. 10. Besides failing to yield the right of way to plaintiff, which was in itself a violation of law under the circumstances of this case and therefore was negligence per se, the defendant's speed, if he was driving at more than forty miles per hour, was prima facie negligence per se. Benjamin v. Noonan (Cal. Sup.) 277 P. 1045; Bugby v. Lewis (Cal. App.) 283 P. 958. The physical facts appearing at the time of the accident support the testimony of one witness to the effect that the defendant's speed in approaching the intersection was in excess of forty miles per hour. As we have seen, his tires made skid marks on the roadway for about forty feet preceding the point of the collision. The force of the impact was sufficient to turn plaintiff's car over on its top with its wheels in the air. The defendant's car turned completely around so that when it came to rest it was facing in the direction from which it approached the intersection. The plaintiff's car traveled about forty feet from the point where it entered the intersection to the point of the collision and during the same time the defendant traveled one hundred and forty feet or more. The speed of the defendant must have been at least three times that of the plaintiff, and if, as urged by the defendant, the plaintiff was driving at more than fifteen miles per hour, the defendant's speed must have been considerably in excess of the rate fixed by law. When the plaintiff entered the intersection the distance of the defendant's car from him was such that a reasonably prudent person might have believed that the defendant would see what was in front of him and so control his car as to avoid a collision instead of driving straight into the plaintiff's automobile. Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Cement Co., 69 Cal. App. 165, 230 P. 995.

[6] If, as maintained by the defendant, a duty rested upon the plaintiff to look and see the defendant approaching the intersection, a like duty rested upon the defendant to look and see the plaintiff in the intersection. Because he failed to look, or failed to see the plaintiff in time to avoid running him down cannot excuse the defendant nor relieve him of the duty imposed upon him by law of driving his automobile "at a careful and prudent speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway," and at such speed as not to endanger the life, limb or property of any person. Section 113, California Vehicle Act, St. 1927, p. 1436.

[7-9] We are well aware that there is evidence in the record contradicting the facts we have set forth in this opinion. Upon the trial judge rested the responsibility and duty of determining the weight to be given to the evidence, its sufficiency, and the credibility of the witness. Where there is a conflict in the evidence there is no reason for disturbing a judgment when, as in this case, it is supported by competent and material evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

Civ. 6987.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 2, 1930.

1. Venue $\S$ 69 — Motion — Answer on file — Motion to retain jurisdiction.

If defendant before hearing on motion for change of venue files answer, court may entertain motion to retain case for convenience of witnesses (Judicial Council Rule XX6(a).

Rule XX 6(a) of the Judicial Council, in force at time of proceedings in question, required defendant, under possible penalty of default judgment, to file answer at same time demurrer was filed.

2. Venue $\S$ 40 — Motion.

Court must allow change of venue to defendant's residence, absent counter showing, if answer is not filed and moving papers are proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by James Rolph & Co., a corporation, against C. G. Krueger. From an order granting plaintiff's motion to retain the cause in the San Francisco court on the ground of convenience of witnesses, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a change of venue, defendant appeals.

McKENZIE, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff commenced an action in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against the defendant. In due time defendant appeared in said action and filed a demurrer and answer to the complaint, and at the same time filed a notice of motion to the end that the action be transferred to Los Angeles county, his place of residence. Before the motion for change of venue came on for hearing, plaintiff filed a notice of motion to the end that the action be retained and tried in the San Francisco court on the ground of the convenience of witnesses. Defendant did not file any affidavit or make any showing in opposition to plaintiff's motion; nor did plaintiff in any way contest the sufficiency of defendant's showing in regard to having the case transferred to Los Angeles. Both motions came on for hearing at the same time and the trial court granted plaintiff's motion and denied that of the defendant. From both orders, the defendant appeals.

The issue presented to this court is free from technicalities and is directed solely to the question as to whether or not under rule XX6(a) of the Judicial Council (which was in force at the time the proceedings herein were had, and which required a defendant, under a possible penalty of a default judgment, to file an answer in the case at the same time as he filed a demurrer), operated to deprive a defendant of his right to have the cause of action moved to the county of his residence, by permitting the plaintiff to make a counter motion to retain the action for trial in the county in which it was brought, on the ground of the convenience of witnesses.

This rule of the Judicial Council has been abrogated; consequently, the decision in this case will not affect present practice.

[1] It is conceded that at all times from the beginning of California's systems of law up to the time when these motions were heard, it was the practice to entertain in the court where the action was commenced a motion to retain for trial in said court the action on the ground of convenience of witnesses, if the defendant had on file an answer prior to the time his motion for change of venue to his place of residence was heard.

[2] Appellant's position is that under the rule he was compelled to file an answer or risk the hazard of having a default judgment entered against his client. We think appellant was unduly apprehensive about what might follow if he had not filed his answer. Viewing the situation at its worst, the danger that appellant thought he was confronted with could be avoided with slight effort. If the answer had not been filed, the court was bound to grant his motion for change of venue to Los Angeles, providing his moving papers were in proper form and there was no counter showing. When his motion was granted he could have asked leave to file his answer. If the court refused, which is not likely, on the ground it had lost jurisdiction, he could have requested that the answer be annexed to the other papers. If this were refused he could get his answer to Los Angeles before the clerk of the court could get the record there. There are a number of other ways hazard could be avoided without much effort. We are of the opinion that a long-established and well-understood rule of law should not be changed or disregarded by judicial construction for reasons guided by fancy rather than reason and experience.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

NORTON, Justice pro tem.

[1] The defendant in this case was convicted of murder in the second degree and appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for new trial. The killing of the deceased, Santiago Fuentes, by the defendant, was admitted by him, and briefly stated the evidence by the prosecution upon the trial of the case showed that in the morning of the 20th of September, 1929, two days before the deceased was slain by the defendant, he met the deceased's wife near the station of the Pacific Electric Company at Los Nietos, where she was waiting to board a street car for Los Angeles, and endeavored to induce her to enter his automobile, and proposed to her that she go with him for the purpose of having illicit relations. He taunted her with the accusation that her husband was familiar with his, Vicunia's wife, and when she refused to accede to his proposal he threatened her husband, stating that he hoped to deprive her of him and allow him to "roll in his own blood." On the evening of the Sunday following this threat by defendant, to take the life of deceased, while Mrs. Fuentes was in her home she heard five shots fired in rapid succession, and looking out the front door of her home she saw her husband struggling with the defendant for the possession of a pistol which was in the hands of the defendant. That her husband finally secured possession of the pistol and shortly thereafter the defendant was seen by her running into his own house from which he presently left, in his automobile. No more than five shots were fired. The deceased was taken to a hospital and at the hospital the pistol, together with the five exploded shells, was surrendered by him to a friend of his who brought him to the hospital. The pistol was a .38 caliber Colts, and was admitted by the defendant to be his. Mrs. Fuentes testified her husband did not own a pistol and that she saw but one pistol at the time of the struggle between her husband and Vicunia. An autopsy was held after the death of the deceased which disclosed that he was suffering from two wounds, a basal fracture of the skull and a gunshot wound in the abdomen which caused his death. The surgeon who performed the autopsy found a bullet from a .38 caliber pistol in the soft tissues of the hip where it had lodged after passing through the iliac crest. A bullet hole was found in the fence in front of the Fuentes home, which tended to corroborate her testimony that the shooting occurred in front of the Fuentes house instead of, as claimed by the defendant, in front of his house, which was located in the lot adjoining that of the deceased. Defendant and his family gave a different account of the transaction from that of the witness for the prosecution, but it was the province of the jury to determine where the truth lay and there is ample evidence to support the verdict of the jury.

The chief ground for reversal urged by appellant is the refusal of the trial court to direct the jury to bring in an instructed verdict of not guilty on the ground that the people failed to prove the corpus delicti. As above stated, there was testimony to the effect that defendant threatened to kill deceased; the testimony of the wife of deceased is to the effect that she heard five shots fired in rapid succession and saw defendant and the deceased struggling in the front yard of her home; that the struggle immediately succeeded the firing of the shots and that during the struggle she saw a revolver in the hands of the defendant. Admittedly, the shooting took place in the yard of either defendant or deceased and not in the house of defendant, and at the end of the struggle it is admitted that deceased was in possession of the gun belonging to defendant, and from which five shots had been fired.

[2-4] In a trial where the charge is murder, the corpus delicti consists of proof of the fact forming the basis of the offense and the existence of a criminal agency as the cause of it, and it may be proved by circumstances shown in evidence or by inference drawn from the facts shown. People v. Ford, 85 Cal. App. 258, 258 P. 1111. Obviously, the testimony of the wife of deceased, if believed by the jury, together with the admitted facts above mentioned, would have justified the jury in concluding that a criminal agency was the cause of the admitted death of the deceased and it is the opinion of the court that the proposed instruction was properly refused by the trial judge.

[5, 6] Numerous objections are urged, some to the refusal of instructions refused by the trial judge and others to instructions which were actually given by the trial judge. As to those given by the trial judge, it is sufficient to say that this court finds no error in any thereof. The instructions refused are not numbered and it is necessary in identifying them to refer to the page in the clerk's transcript in which they are contained. Instruction, page 40, clerk's transcript, proposed by defendant, was properly refused by the court for the reason that it did not include as an element for the justification of killing in self-defense that the fear of great bodily injury on the part of defendant arose from circumstances which were such as to justify a reasonable man in entertaining such fear. Instruction, page 43, clerk's transcript, as proposed to the court, was clearly an instruction to the jury as to matters of fact which was not within the province of the court. It is true that this instruction might have been altered and reframed so as to contain a correct statement of the law, but to do so would have required more than the correction of a mere clerical error. The instruction, as proposed, was fundamentally an instruction as to matters of fact and not an attempt to define the law applicable to the case, and this court believes that the trial judge was justified in refusing to give the instruction in the form in which it was proposed. It is also covered by instructions given by the court wherein the court fully and fairly instructed the jury as to when a defendant can act upon appearances and justify the killing of another in self-defense.

Other grounds are urged for a reversal of the judgment and after consideration of them we are of the opinion that they are relatively trivial and without any merit.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

GELBACH v. DEWEY.

Civ. 5746.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

April 9, 1930.

1. Bills and notes ⇨495 — Comakers — Liability — Presumption.

Liability of comakers on joint and several note is presumed equal, absent evidence to contrary.

2. Contribution ⇨9(5) — Action — Accommodation maker — Pleading.

Plaintiff suing comaker of note for contribution, contending his wife was mere accommodation and not comaker, held required to so allege in complaint.

3. Contribution ⇨4 — Joint note — Comakers — Liability.

Comaker of joint and several note, if compelled to pay more than share, held entitled to contribution; agreement respecting comakers' liability between themselves not being binding on payee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Action by Fred N. Gelbach against L. D. Dewey. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Eugene C. Campbell, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Stephen H. Underwood, of Long Beach, for respondent.

NORTON, Justice pro tem.

In this action the plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant, who was one of the comakers with plaintiff of a joint and several promissory note executed and delivered by the makers to the California National Bank of Long Beach. The plaintiff alleged in his complaint and the court so found that on the second day of January, 1926, at Long Beach, Cal., the plaintiff, defendant Dewey, R. D. Marshall, and Susan Gelbach, who is the wife of plaintiff, made and delivered to the California National Bank of Long Beach their joint and several promissory note in writing in the sum of $5,500, payable one hundred and twenty days after date; that at maturity of said note the said bank demanded payment of the note and the plaintiff did pay the full amount of the principal of the note and $450 of accrued interest; that at the time of the execution of the note the defendant, the plaintiff, and Marshall each agreed to pay at maturity one-third of the principal and interest of said note. In accordance with these findings the court concluded that plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum of $1,983.34, being one-third of the amount paid by plaintiff in satisfaction of the said note and judgment was entered accordingly.

[1, 2] The principal ground of appeal is that the finding that the defendant agreed to pay one-third of the principal and interest of the note is not supported by the evidence. A careful examination of the record in our opinion reveals no evidence to warrant this finding, and none has been called to our attention by the respondent which would justify it. The fact appears to be, and the plaintiff so testified, that at the time the note was signed "nothing was said about it." The conclusion is therefore compelling that there was no express agreement between the plaintiff, Dewey, and Marshall that each should pay one-third of the note which evidenced their common debt to the bank. The finding is also contrary to the evidence. From the facts shown by plaintiff upon the trial no implied promise arose upon the part of Dewey to pay in excess of one-fourth at most of the joint indebtedness. The note being the joint contract of the parties, their liability was presumed equal in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Bunker v. Osborn, 132 Cal. 480, 64 P. 853; Owens v. Blackburn, 161 App. Div. 827, 146 N. Y. S. 966. Respondent, however, contends that the evidence shows that Susan Gelbach, the wife of plaintiff, was an accommodation maker for the other parties and therefore not liable to make contribution. There is slight, if any, evidence to sustain this contention, and such evidence as there is in the record can be said to merely create a suspicion that the fact is as claimed by plaintiff. Moreover, it was not made an issue by the pleadings and no finding in that regard was made by the court. If the plaintiff claimed that Susan Gelbach was a mere accommodation maker on the note, he should have so alleged in his complaint.

In view of the contention of appellant and the holding here that the finding of the trial court that the defendant agreed to pay one-third of the amount of the note is not supported by the evidence, it is unnecessary to consider appellant's argument in support of the claim that the payment of plaintiff of defendant's proportionate share of the note was voluntary.

The evidence was sufficient if believed by the court to support the finding that defendant did not sign the note as an accommodation maker and as surety for plaintiff. There is sufficient evidence in the record to support the finding and for the court to conclude that this loan was obtained by plaintiff, Dewey, and Marshall from the California National Bank of Long Beach for the use of an oil syndicate for which they were trustees and in which they were financially interested and not for the accommodation of plaintiff. The finding that the plaintiff did not agree to hold the defendant harmless of the payment of the note likewise finds sufficient evidence to support it.

[3] The action is an action for contribution; the agreement alleged to have been made at the time the note was made as to how the payment should be shared is not inconsistent with their joint liability. It was not binding upon the bank, as it was not party to it. The only purpose the agreement could have served was to acknowledge that plaintiff and defendants were cosureties to the extent of one-third of the debt. The parties to the note were still jointly liable to the bank for the full amount thereof, and, if any of them were compelled to pay more than his share, he was entitled to contribution from his associates who failed to pay. Flickinger v. Price, 165 Iowa, 570, 146 N. W. 738.

The judgment is reversed.

DELLA v. HOME BANK OF PORTERVILLE et al.
Civ. 91.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

April 7, 1930.

1. Fraudulent conveyances — §132(1) — Sale without transfer — Effect — Buyer trustee for creditors.

Debtor's attempted sale of cattle to bank without transferring possession was void, and bank held proceeds of resale in trust for creditors (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Civ. Code, § 3440, provides that transfers of personal property are presumed to be fraudulent and therefore void against those who are seller's creditors, where seller is in possession, and sale is not accompanied by immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of thing transferred.

2. Banks and banking — §136 — Lien on customer's property — Void sale to bank.

Where sale of cattle to bank was void, bank could not justify its use of proceeds from resale under banker's lien statute (Civ. Code, § 3054).

Civ. Code, § 3054, provides that banker has a general lien, dependent on possession, on all property in his hands belonging to customer, for balance due to him from such customer in course of business.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by A. Della against the Home Bank of Porterville and another, doing business under the name of Shepard Bros. and Shepard Bros. Meat Market. From the judgment, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Max B. Jamison, of Porterville, for appellants.

Waldo E. Burford, of Porterville, for respondent.

MARKS, J.

Respondent brought this action to recover the sum of $505.75 from appellants. It is based on a judgment rendered January 24, 1927, against appellant R. A. Shepard, doing business under the name of Shepard Bros. and Shepard Bros. Meat Market. Execution was issued and served on the Home Bank of Porterville and returned unsatisfied.

On and prior to April 20, 1926, the appellant Shepard conducted a meat market in the city of Porterville, Cal. The business venture was a failure. Besides the account on which the judgment of January 24, 1927, was rendered, he owed respondent $61.20, and owed the appellant bank $3,625, evidenced by three promissory notes. There were also a number of accounts due to other creditors. Shepard was insolvent on and after March 5, 1926.

On March 5, 1926, Shepard gave the appellant bank a bill of sale to twenty head of steers and fifteen head of stock cattle located in a pasture on a ranch leased and occupied by him. On the same day the bank wrote Shepard a letter agreeing to sell the cattle and credit the net proceeds upon his notes. It did not take possession of the cattle. Some were butchered by Shepard and others he sold to a third party. On April 20, 1926, the bank sold the remaining cattle for $1,284.94, which money it retained, and credited Shepard's notes with $1,300 in accordance with a verbal promise made to Shepard so to do.

On March 24, 1926, Shepard gave respondent the following bill of sale:

"I have this day sold to A. Della all hides and tallow I have in my hide vat and those that may accumulate until I have paid him (A. Della) the sum of $495.00."

Della did not take possession of the hides or tallow, but subsequently sold the hides for $284.20. Before this money was paid to Della it was taken under execution by another creditor of Shepard's, and respondent received no part of it.

Just prior to April 14, 1926, a notice of intention to place a chattel mortgage on the furnishings and fixtures in the meat market in favor of one of the creditors, not a party to this action, was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Tulare county. On April 15, 1926, there was recorded in the same office a notice that Shepard had sold to the Home Bank of Porterville all his stock in trade, furniture, furnishings, and fixtures in the meat market and fixing the Home Bank of Porterville and 9 o'clock a. m. on April 23, 1926, as the time and place of consummating such sale. A bill of sale transferring to the bank the property described in the notice was acknowledged by Shepard on April 14, 1926, and was recorded on April 16, 1926.

On April 20, 1926, there was a meeting of some of Shepard's creditors, which resulted in a written agreement which was signed by some of those participating in the meeting, including the appellant bank, by the terms of which the attempt to mortgage the market was abandoned and its sale to the bank approved, conditioned upon the bank's agreement to dispose of the meat market and its prorating the receipts therefrom among the creditors, which the bank proceeded to do. The cattle were not mentioned in this transaction and the bank did not place any portion of the money received from their sale in this creditor's fund, but did participate as a creditor in its distribution of funds derived from the sale of the market. Respondent did not attend the creditors' meeting, and did not sign the creditors' agreement. He testified that he did not know of this agreement, and did not know of the sale of the cattle by Shepard or the bank until about April 28, 1926. He did know that the bank had taken over the meat market and filed his bill for $61.20 with the attorney for the bank and received two dividends totaling $13.77 on this bill. He did not file the bill involved in this case with the bank or its representatives, and received no payment upon it.

[1] In accordance with the foregoing facts, the trial court found that at the time of the attempted sale of the cattle to the bank they were in the possession of Shepard, and that the sale was void as against other creditors, for the reason that there was no immediate and continued change of possession of the cattle from Shepard to the bank, as required under the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code. Judgment was rendered in favor of respondent against both appellants.

There is no question in this case that there was no immediate or continued change of possession of the cattle from Shepard to the bank and that the attempted sale to the bank was fraudulent and void as to the other existing creditors of Shepard. The attempted sale must be treated as though it had never taken place, and the bank must be regarded as holding the money it received from the sale of the cattle in trust for the benefit of the creditors of Shepard. Allee v. Shay, 92 Cal. App. 749, 268 P. 962. In the case of Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Duffet, 48 Cal. App. 674, 192 P. 298, 299, it was held as follows:

"It has been held (First National Bank v. Maxwell, 123 Cal. 360, 69 Am. St. Rep. 64, 55 P. 980), that, so far as existing creditors are concerned, the title and ownership of the property conveyed with intent to defraud creditors remains in the fraudulent grantor as fully as though no transfer had been attempted, and the transfer being void as against them, a creditor may seize and sell the property under execution, and the sheriff's deed thereto transfers the legal title itself, and not a mere equity. Under such circumstances, then, in so far as this creditor was concerned, the property transferred was yet the property of its debtor. The creditor chose in this action to treat Josephine Duffet as a trustee of said property, holding for its debtor for the benefit of his creditors. In doing this it had the plain right to follow the trust property, regardless of the form in which it was found. It is quite immaterial in this equitable action whether the property was in the form of the house originally transferred, or whether it had been converted into improvements upon another house owned by Josephine Duffet. This being an equitable action, in which Josephine Duffet is sought to be held as a trustee, equity will follow the trust funds wherever they may be found."

To the same effect is the case of Henderson v. D. S. Denchy Mercantile Co., 48 Cal. App. 41, 191 P. 558.

[2] The appellant bank attempts to justify its use of the money received from the sale of the cattle and its application on Shepard's notes under the provisions of section 3054 of the Civil Code, which provides as follows:

"A banker has a general lien, dependent on possession, upon all property in his hands belonging to a customer, for the balance due to him from such customer in the course of the business."

This contention cannot be maintained, as the very act under which the bank secured possession of the money for the cattle which it sold is the one held void in this action. As we have seen, the only right of possession of the money the bank had was as trustee for the benefit of the creditors of Shepard. Section 3054 of the Civil Code cannot be used to nullify the provisions of section 3440 of the same Code.

Judgment affirmed.

Civ. 276.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 9, 1930.

Rehearing Denied May 6, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 5, 1930.

1. Insurance ☞579 — Payment conditioned upon release — Condition precedent — Recovery.

Insurer's offer to pay loss provided releases were given, contemplated payment simultaneous with releases, hence releases were not condition precedent to offeree's recovery of promised payment.

2. Insurance ☞579 — Insurer's offer to pay — Release — Acceptance construed.

Insurer's offer to pay loss, provided releases were given by offeree, her daughter, and son-in-law, held accepted, although offeree said only she would sign release.

The insurer had issued policy insuring automobile owner against claims made for injury to persons of others, and insured automobile was involved in accident with another automobile containing three persons,—plaintiff, her daughter, and her son-in-law, plaintiff being only one injured. The insurer offered to pay certain amount but "in case the proposition is accepted it will be necessary for us to have releases" from all three persons. The plaintiff replied, accepting the offer, and stating that, on receiving payment, "I will sign a release."

3. Insurance — Settlement — Defective acceptance — Offerer's duty to give notice.

Defects in form of acceptance of releases under liability policy were waived where offerer did not communicate objection to offeree (Civ. Code, § 1501).

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action by Mae C. Lodge against the General Accident, Fire & Life Assurance Corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Wakefield & Hansen, of Fresno, for appellant.

Harris & Hayhurst and Rue C. Gibson, all of Fresno, for respondent.

MARKS, Acting P. J.

[1] This action was brought by respondent to recover three hundred fifty dollars alleged to be due under a contract with appellant. On February 6, 1927, Chris Jensen was the owner of an automobile upon which appellant had written a policy insuring him against claims made for injury to the persons of others. On the day in question his wife was driving the car, with his consent, and it was involved in an accident with another automobile driven by A. J. Cromer, in which respondent, mother-in-law of Cromer, and Mrs. Cromer were passengers. Respondent suffered injuries which came within the terms of the insurance policy.

Shortly after the accident respondent entered into negotiations with appellant through A. B. Brown, its agent in Fresno, Cal., in an endeavor to settle her claim for the damages suffered by her. She was postmistress in the town of Auberry, about forty miles from Fresno, and her negotiations were carried on by letter. The record shows the following communications regarding the attempted settlement. On the 15th day of June, 1927, appellant sent to Mr. A. B. Brown, its Fresno agent, the following telegram:

"San Francisco, Calif. 15, 3.45P

"A. B. Brown, Care Pacific Coast Adjustment Bureau. Pacific Southwest Bldg. Fresno, Calif. Your telephone message Lodge versus Jensen stop Will not pay more than three hundred fifty dollars.

"William F. Murray, Manager Claims Dept."

On November 8, 1927, Brown wrote to Mrs. Lodge as follows:

"Mrs. M. Lodge, Auberry, California.

"Dear Mrs. Lodge: Supplementing our recent conversation, I wish to advise that a further report was submitted to the company and their letter replying was received today without much encouragement. However, they requested that I procure from you an itemized list of your claim, which indicates some little interest. Therefore, I will kindly request that you mail me the list showing the items of expense of all those involved in the accident. When this is received I will submit it and again attempt to ascertain what I can accomplish towards getting the matter cleared up. With kind personal regards, I am very truly yours, A. B. Brown, Adjuster.

"P. S. Attorney Harris called on the writer stating that any arrangements that you made would be satisfactory. A. B. B."

On November 19, 1927, Mrs. Lodge wrote Brown as follows:

"Auberry, California, November 19, 1927.

"Mr. A. B. Brown, Fresno, California.

"My dear Mr. Brown: Complying with your request, find enclosed list of our expenses and losses. The loss and the expenses on the old car were put upon us by the accident just as squarely as the other items of loss, damage and doctors. In the enclosed list I have not included my sickness, pain and suffering, from which I have not yet recovered, and which is greater than all the rest put together.

"Very truly yours, Mae C. Lodge."

On December 7, 1927, Brown wrote the following letter:

"Mrs. Mae C. Lodge, Auberry, California.

"Dear Mrs. Lodge: In reply to your communication of November 19, we wish to advise that we have not neglected answering your letter, but there has been some delay because of several exchanges of correspondence with the company, and today they wrote us stating that they did not desire to increase their original offer of $350.

"In checking over your itemized list of loss, we note you have an item of $57.50 for coat and hose, $25.00 for serge dress and undergarments, cleaners and laundry, $4.70, loss on old car $100.00. License, taxes and purchase of used tire, $28.65, which total $215.85. These items all pertain to property damage and loss of use which are not covered under my company's policy.

"Since interviewing you, we have ascertained that Mr. Jensen did not have, at the time of the accident, any insurance covering property damage and loss of use, consequently your claim for these items should be against Mr. Jensen.

"Your entire list totaled $561.85, which amount, less the $215.85, for which the company would not be liable, in any event, equals $346.00 or four dollars less than the company offered you in settlement several months ago. We are advised that the sanatorium bill amounted to $46.45, and the doctor's bill for treatment of injuries resulting from the accident, amounted to $25.00. Undoubtedly you have had other medical and hotel expenses not chargeable to the accident, and it does not seem probable that you were obliged to make seven round trips to Fresno for treatment of injuries because of the accident, as it is probable some of these trips were in reference to getting your car repaired, trading it in, or other business affairs you may have had, consequently, according to your own statement of loss, it is evident that the company was very fair in making an offer to compromise the case for $350.00.

"The writer has thoroughly thrashed all of these items out with the company, and they have given us their final conclusion, which we are transmitting to you. You will understand that in case the proposition is accepted it will be necessary for us to have releases from Mr. and Mrs. Cromer and from you, but the releases will be so worded that they will not affect any claim you may have against Mr. Jensen for property damage, loss of use, etc.

"Trusting you understand my attitude in this matter, and with kind personal regards, I am very truly yours,

"A. B. Brown, Adjuster."

On January 31, 1928, Mrs. Lodge replied as follows:

"Auberry, California, January 31, 1928.

"Mr. A. B. Brown, Fresno, California.

"My dear Mr. Brown: The list of expenses which I sent you is correct, and my doctor's bill as stated was due entirely to the accident. But if your company will not reimburse me without suit, I must accept the loss rather than go on with further worry. On payment to me of the $350.00, as offered, I will sign a release.

"Very truly yours, Mae C. Lodge."

On February 23, 1928, Brown wrote to Mrs. Lodge as follows:

"Mrs. Mae C. Lodge, Auberry, California.

"Dear Mrs. Lodge: In reply to your letter of January 31st, which we promptly forwarded to the General Accident, at Pine and Sansome streets, San Francisco, we wish to advise that we received their letter today stating that inasmuch as the statute of limitations had run on your case, they would not make any payment to you. Under the circumstances we will be obliged to close our file.

"Very truly yours,

"A. B. Brown, Adjuster."

Upon these letters the trial court found that there was a written contract whereby appellant agreed to pay respondent the sum of three hundred fifty dollars, and rendered judgment accordingly.

The sole question to be decided on this appeal is whether or not respondent's letter of January 31, 1928, was an acceptance of appellant's offer to pay her claim. Appellant maintains that its offer was conditioned upon its receiving releases signed by all three occupants of the Cromer car. It does not appear that Mr. or Mrs. Cromer suffered any injuries in the accident or made any claim against appellant. It will be noted that in the letters to respondent, appellant used the pronoun "your" in referring to the losses, and "you" in speaking of the payment, both seemingly being used in the singular. It seems clear from these letters that it was proposed to pay the money to respondent, and that it was not contemplated that any of it would be paid to either Mr. or Mrs. Cromer. In replying to these letters the respondent also made use of the personal pronoun, which is not surprising, as she was not an attorney nor was she learned in the technicalities and phraseology of the law. In the offer of appellant it was stated that in case it "is accepted, it will be necessary for us to have releases from you and Mr. and Mrs. Cromer." There is a clear inference that the releases to be signed were to be prepared by appellant and presented by it for signature at the time the money was paid. This was not done.

[2, 3] We believe that a fair construction of the correspondence shows that respondent intended to accept the offer of settlement as made by appellant. As respondent's letter was intended as an acceptance, it was incumbent upon appellant to promptly communicate to her any objection which it had to the form of the acceptance, or be subjected to the conclusion that it had waived such objection. Section 1501, Civ. Code; Lockhart v. J. H. McDougall Co., 190 Cal. 308, 212 P. 1; McClintick v. Leonards (Cal. App.) 285 P. 351. Appellant did not do this. It waited until the seventeenth day after the statute of limitations had run upon respondent's claim for damages, and then its agent wrote "that inasmuch as the statute of limitations had run on your case, they (the appellant) would not make any payment to you."

The offer was to pay money. The offeree agreed to accept money. The releases were not to be delivered at the time of the offer and acceptance. Their delivery was an incident to coincide in point of time with the payment and receipt of the money. Appellant could not expect to demand and receive the releases before it tendered the money to respondent and was ready to deliver it to her. This it failed to do, repudiating all prior negotiations, not upon the ground of any defect in form of the acceptance, but on the ground that the statute of limitations had run against respondent's claim. Under the circumstances disclosed by the record, respondent having accepted the offer in compromise of her claim, appellant should not be heard to urge an objection to the form of her acceptance for the first time in a subsequent action where it had failed to make such objection promptly, or at all, but relied upon the statute of limitations having run against her demand for damages.

Judgment affirmed.

SCHUMANN v. CALIFORNIA COTTON CREDIT CORPORATION.

Civ. 273.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 8, 1930.

1. Chattel mortgages §141 — Cotton crop — Picking advances — Ginning advances — "Wage."

"Picking advances" and "ginning advances," made deductible from proceeds of cotton before paying grower's creditor, included money advanced to pay wages of weigher, cost of sacks, renting sleeping tents for pickers, and transporting cotton; "wage."

The contract provided that the mortgagee of the cotton would pay to a creditor of the grower-mortgagor the sum of "$1,000 out of the first money derived from the sale of the crops produced upon the above described premises after deducting therefrom any sums of money which may have been advanced * * * not exceeding however the sum of $3,000 plus picking and ginning advances." Under well-known trade usage prevailing in these districts, the phrases "picking advances" and "ginning advances" include the cost to the grower of picking crop, wages of weigher, rent of sleeping tents for pickers, and cost of trucking cotton from field to gin and other such expenses. The term "wage" is defined as compensation for services rendered, which may take the form of money paid or other value given, such as board, lodging, or clothes.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Wage," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Customs and usages §13 — Trade usage — Contract.

Persons carrying on trade are deemed to have contracted in reference to known trade usage.

3. Customs and usages §15(1) — Contracts — Evidence — Admissibility.

Evidence of known trade usage is admissible to supply deficiency or interpret contract.

4. Chattel mortgages §141 — Advances — Contract — Modification — Written consent.

Where grower received additional advances from crop mortgagee under oral agreement of grower's creditor for modification of contract relative to disposition of proceeds, creditor could not claim modification was void for want of written consent.

The contract originally provided that $1,000 should be paid to the grower's creditor out of the proceeds of the cotton crop after deducting $3,000 advances for raising crop, plus picking and ginning advances. However, more money became necessary to bring the crop to maturity, and additional amounts were advanced by the mortgagee on the promise of the grower's creditor to give written consent to the modification of the contract to protect the mortgagee to the extent of the additional advances.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by J. E. Schumann against the California Cotton Credit Corporation. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Walter Sorensen, of Fresno, for appellant.
Irvine P. Aten, of Fresno, for respondent.

MARKS, Acting P. J.

Under date of July 13, 1927, the parties to this action entered into a written contract concerning a crop of cotton being raised in Madera county, Cal., by H. Neilan. At that time Neilan was indebted to appellant in the sum of $2,200 on the purchase price of pumping plants and pumping equipment sold by appellant to him under conditional sales contracts which reserved the title to the personal property in appellant.

Respondent was a corporation organized and existing for the purpose, among other things, or loaning money to growers of cotton to enable them to finance their farming operations. It had loaned Neilan approximately $3,900 with which to raise a crop of cotton upon the Madera county property and had taken a crop mortgage to secure its loan. Neilan required additional money from respondent to mature and harvest his crop, and, to enable this to be advanced, as well as to insure that the pumping plants and pumping equipment would remain upon the property during the cotton growing season, the parties entered into the written contract in question.

The contract provided, among other things, that respondent would advance "to the said H. Neilan a sum of money not to exceed $3,000.00 to be used by said H. Neilan in farming said crop of cotton exclusive of picking and ginning advances," and that respondent would pay to appellant "the sum of $1,000.00 out of the first money derived from the sale of the crops produced upon the above described premises after deducting therefrom any sums of money which may have been advanced by second party to said H. Neilan, not exceeding, however, the sum of $3,000.00 plus picking and ginning advances, and second party by executing this agreement does hereby agree that it will pay over to first party the sum of $1,000.00 out of the first proceeds derived from the sale of the crops produced upon said above described premises after deducting any moneys advanced by it to the said H. Neilan, which advances are not to exceed the sum of $3,000.00 for raising crop, plus picking and ginning advances. It is distinctly understood and agreed that the said second party shall not be entitled to deduct from the proceeds derived from the crops to be produced upon the hereinbefore described premises, any sums of money which have not been actually used in connection with the growing and harvesting of the crops upon said above described premises until after said first party has been paid the said sum of $1,000.00."

In appellant's complaint it was alleged that respondent received from the sale of the cotton and cotton seed grown on the Madera county ranch the sum of $6,206.62 after the cost of ginning the cotton had been deducted by the ginning company, and that respondent had expended the sum of $1,582.25 for picking the cotton, together with the $3,000 for farming operations, leaving a balance in its hands of the sum of $1,624.37, out of which appellant was entitled to be paid the sum of $1,000. Respondent's answer admitted the amount received by it for the cotton and cotton seed, but alleged it had expended the sum of $2,638.48 for picking expenses in picking the cotton and delivering it to the gin, and further alleged that there was a modification of the contract whereby the parties had agreed it might advance to Neilan the sum of $4,000 instead of $3,000 for farming and maturing the crop of cotton. Under the allegations of the answer, the respondent pleaded an executed oral agreement modifying the contract of July 13, 1927, under which oral agreement it was authorized to advance Neilan $4,000 in the place of $3,000 for farming operations, as provided in the written contract, and alleged facts sufficient to put in issue the question of whether or not appellant had waived his right to demand his $1,000 before respondent had received the $4,000 advanced by it, together with the picking and ginning advances made by it, and also whether or not appellant was estopped from demanding his money until respondent had received its advances as last set forth.

Appellant presents two questions to be decided upon this appeal: First, he urges that under the language of the contract the respondent is only entitled to deduct and retain for itself the cost of the actual picking of the cotton, that is, the taking of the fibre from the boll and placing it in the sacks by the pickers; and, second, that it is only entitled to deduct and retain the sum of $3,000 as cost of farming operations as specified in the written contract. We will consider these questions in the order stated.

[1-3] It is admitted that the actual cost of picking the cotton from the plant and placing it in the sacks was the sum of $1,481.19. The evidence disclosed, however, that an additional sum of $1,157.29 was received from respondent by Neilan and used by him in other expenses connected with the harvesting of the cotton crop, such as the wages paid a weigher to weigh the cotton brought in from the fields by the pickers, upon which weights they were paid for their labor, in buying picking sacks for use by the pickers, in renting tents used as sleeping quarters by them, in paying the cost of trucking the cotton from the ranch to the gin, and other such expenses. Appellant maintains that these expenditures were not a proper deduction to be made under the terms of the written contract.

Appellant construes the phrase "plus picking and ginning advances" as though the words "as cost of actual picking, and cost of actual ginning" were used. We think this is too narrow a construction to be placed upon these phrases in view of the general terms of the contract, apparent intention of the parties, and common trade usage. The phrase "plus picking and ginning advances" is explained by a following phrase, under the terms of which it would appear to be the intention of the parties to include therein any sums of money which were "actually used in connection with the growing and harvesting of the crops."

It seems that the phrases "picking advances" and "ginning advances" are in common use in the districts raising cotton, and have a well-defined meaning there. Evidence was introduced to the effect that these phrases have a known usage in these districts. Under such usage they include the cost to the grower of the picking sacks used by the pickers, the wages of the weigher, the rent of tents or other living quarters for the pickers, the cost of trucking the cotton from the field to the gin, and other such expenses.

"It is the general rule that, when there is a known usage of the trade, persons carrying on that trade are deemed to have contracted in reference to the usage, unless the contrary appears; that the usage forms a part of the contract, and that evidence of usage is always admissible to supply a deficiency or as a means of interpretation where it does not alter or vary the terms of the contract." Buckner v. Leon & Co., 204 Cal. 225, 267 P. 693.

It is not necessary, however, to rely upon the trade definition of these terms to conclude that at least part of these expenses should be allowed respondent. In this case the wages of the cotton pickers included, not only the actual money paid per pound for the cotton picked, but to this was added sleeping quarters for the pickers. Wage is compensation for services rendered, and this compensation may take the form of money paid or other value given, such as board, lodging, or clothes. 18 R. C. L. 530; 39 Cor. Jur.

160; Hancock v. Yaden, 121 Ind. 366, 23 N. E. 253, 6 L. R. A. 576, 16 Am. St. Rep. 396; Moulin v. Columbet, 22 Cal. 508. We are of the opinion that the phrases under consideration include money advanced by respondent to Neilan and used by him in paying the necessary expenses connected with the picking of the cotton, its transportation to the gin, and the ginning thereof, and that the finding of the trial court that the sum of $2,638.48 so used for this purpose was supported by the evidence in this case.

[4] In connection with the second ground relied upon by appellant for reversal, it shows that on or about August 1, 1927, respondent had advanced to Neilan the sum of $2,940.35, which had been used by him in paying his expenses in raising the crop of cotton. It was not matured on this date, and it was evident that Neilan would require more money to bring it into maturity. The representative of respondent took the matter up with, and explained the circumstances to, appellant, and the evidence shows that appellant agreed to permit respondent to advance Neilan an additional sum of $750 for this purpose, and that this was to be repaid to respondent before appellant would receive his $1,000. Respondent advanced this sum to Neilan with the knowledge of appellant. It later appeared that more money was needed by Neilan. There was a bill owing for power which was unpaid, and the power company threatened to turn off its electricity. The agent of respondent and Neilan visited appellant and explained the situation to him. Appellant thereupon agreed to a further advancement of $250 to Neilan by respondent, and agreed that he (appellant) would not demand nor expect to receive his $1,000 until respondent had been repaid the sum of $4,000, together with the picking and ginning advances. Thereupon respondent's agent paid Neilan the sum of $250 in the presence of appellant. Respondent advanced to Neilan for his farming operations the sum of $4,090.47.

Respondent requested appellant to give his written consent to the modification of the contract in connection with the advancement of the $4,000 instead of the $3,000 to Neilan. Appellant promised to give such written consent, but never did so, and, because of his failure to do so, now maintains that the parol contract to amend the written contract was never executed. We cannot agree with appellant in this contention. If appellant had given his written consent to the modification of the contract of July 13, 1927, this contract would have been modified by another written contract and not by an oral agreement. We believe that the oral agreement was fully executed. They agreed orally to the two modifications we have mentioned, and, in accordance therewith, respondent paid Neilan more than the extra thousand dollars. There was nothing for any of the parties to do to make this oral agreement executed. Appellant cannot now be heard to say that his failure to consent in writing to the modification of the original contract voided his oral consent to such modification. He knew that respondent had acted upon such oral agreement and paid Neilan the thousand dollars in question. He cannot be permitted to stand idly by and see the other party to the contract act upon it and pay out money upon his verbal agreement and consent and then claim that such agreement and consent was inoperative. *Pence v. NOURSE, P. J.

Plaintiff sued to recover the sum of $9,000 claimed due on a promissory note. She had judgment for $5,000, without interest, from which defendants appeal upon typewritten transcripts.

The defense to the complaint was that the note was usurious. The evidence showed that but $5,000 was actually loaned to defendants and that the sum of $4,000 was a bonus or interest for the loan. Plaintiff waived claim to the sum of $4,000 and interest and asked for judgment for the principal sum alone.

The appeal is grounded on the assertion that because the transaction called for an usurious bonus and interest the entire note evidencing the debt for the principal sum was void and uncollectable. The point is without merit. The Usury Law enacted by the electors (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii) provides that any agreement calling for a greater return than that permitted by the act "shall be null and void as to any agreement or stipulation * * * to pay interest and no action at law to recover interest in any sum shall be maintained. * * *" Section 2.

As said in Community L. Co. v. Chute (Cal. App.) 284 P. 466, 469, "it will be noted that the act quoted above does not declare the note void, but only the portion of the agreement or contract as to the payment of interest shall be null and void." This is in harmony with all the decisions in this state on the subject. Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. 609, 622, 254 P. 956, 255 P. 805, 53 A. L. R. 725; Davis v. Westphal (Cal. Civ. 7255, 7256. ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California.

April 5, 1930.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 5, 1930.

In the matter of the application of Aaron Michaels et al., stockholders of the Pacific Soft Water Laundry, a corporation, to test the validity of the election of W. C. Bull et al., as directors of said corporation.

See, also, 286 P. 165, 172.

PER CURIAM.

In their petition for a rehearing in cause No. 7255 respondents criticise the paragraph of the opinion reading: "And also that, because of the allegations relating to the pledge of this stock to the Marine Bank before this suit was commenced the bank is a necessary party to this litigation, and that, if these allegations are found to be true, then the corporation may no longer assert the invalidity of the stock under the settled rule of the cases cited."

Respondents now offer, in this case, to prove that the pledge of the stock of the Marine Bank was fully satisfied and that the loan was repaid. Whether this was done before the trial of the cause is not stated. However, the language referred to was not necessary to the opinion and is, therefore, stricken out.

Respondents also complain of the portion of the judgment limiting the issues on the retrial as to appellant Thompson, which withdraws from the retrial the issue of fraud as to this appellant. This was done because the parties have had their day in court on that issue. The respondents failed to prove anything but a suspicion of fraud, while the only competent evidence on the subject, including the presumptions and inferences which must be drawn, compelled us to find in favor of this appellant on that issue.

In a separate petition the respondents ask leave to present additional evidence under section 956a, Code of Civil Procedure. The proffered evidence relates to the matters of restoration and ratification. It does not include the issues which must be retried as to parties other than Thompson. As we pointed out in the original opinion, a judgment for these parties would require a judgment for Thompson, but a judgment adverse to them would not necessarily conclude the case as to this appellant.

The petition for a rehearing and the petition for leave to offer additional testimony are both denied.

MORTON v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
Civ. 6784.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 9, 1930.

New trial §164 — Trial court — Duty.

Superior court having granted new trial, in action for false imprisonment, wherein verdict was against defendant employer alone and defendant employees were exonerated, held under duty to proceed with new trial.

Action for damages for malicious prosecution was brought against employer and several employees. Motion for new trial based upon grounds of excessive damages, insufficiency of evidence, and that verdict was against law was granted, and superior court refused to set cause down for trial, basing its refusal on ground that by reason of verdict exonerating employees, employer was discharged from liability.

Application by Robert A. Morton for a writ of mandate prayed to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, and the Honorable John L. Fleming, Judge of Department 10 thereof, to compel respondent court to set cause for trial.

Peremptory writ issued.

Rohe & Freston, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Lawler & Degnan, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, J.

Petitioner commenced an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county against the Walter M. Murphy Motors Company and several of its employees, to recover damages for a false imprisonment, and for malicious prosecution occurring during a period of time thereafter, but arising out of the same set of circumstances upon which the false imprisonment was based. The action was tried upon the issue of false imprisonment only.

Upon conclusion of the trial of said cause, verdict was rendered by the jury in favor of plaintiff, petitioner here, as against the defendant Walter M. Murphy Motors Company only, for the sum of $5,000, and said verdict also found in favor of the employees of defendant corporation, who were the only other defendants.

Thereafter, the corporation moved for a new trial. This motion was made upon the grounds of excessive damages, insufficiency of evidence, and that the verdict was against law. Said motion was granted on all of the grounds stated.

The trial court then refused to set said cause down for trial, basing its refusal on the ground that, by reason of the verdict exonerating the employees, the employer was discharged from liability. The question raised by said ruling is whether, when an employee or employees are sued with an employer for acts as alleged in this action, and a judgment is rendered against the employer, and the employees included in the verdict are all exonerated by such verdict, and when thereafter a new trial is granted on motion of the employer, may the court then refuse to try the case for the reason that necessarily the result of the trial must be favorable to the defendant? We think that it is the plain duty of the court to proceed in accordance with the order granting a new trial. It may not arbitrarily be assumed that the evidence to be produced at the second trial will be identical with the evidence received during the first trial.

Let the peremptory writ issue.

R. L. THOMPSON, J.

This is a motion on the part of respondents to affirm an order denying defendants' application for a change of venue.

The complaint was brought against the principal and sureties on an indemnity bond for the value of labor performed and materials furnished by the plaintiffs pursuant to a contract for the repairing of a hotel building at Redding. The defendants filed a motion for change of venue based upon an asserted residence in San Francisco. The plaintiffs filed a counter motion to retain the action for trial in the county of Shasta. Affidavits and counter affidavits were filed by the respective parties on both motions. Upon the hearing of these motions the court denied defendants' application for a change of venue and granted plaintiffs' motion to retain the action for trial in Shasta county. A notice of appeal was filed in due time and a demand for a transcript was made pursuant to section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The clerk prepared and personally certified to the proceedings, including therein the complaint, counter motions, demands and accompanying affidavits of the respective parties, the minute order of the court disposing of these motions, the notice of appeal, demand for a clerk's transcript, and the clerk's certificate of proceedings. It does not appear from this record that the defendants either demurred to the complaint or filed an answer thereto. No certificate of the trial judge to the accuracy of the proceedings or the affidavits appears. The transcript, certified to by the clerk alone, was filed in this court June 7, 1929. Appellants' opening brief on appeal was filed August 7, 1929. After extensions of time procured for the filing of respondents' brief, this motion was filed by it March 15, 1930, to affirm the orders of the trial court denying defendants' application for a change of venue and granting plaintiffs' counter motion to retain the action for trial in Shasta county for the convenience of witnesses.

[1,2] Assuming that the record which is before this court "constitutes a full, true, and correct copy of the judgment roll," as the clerk has certified that it does, we must conclude that no answer was filed since none appears in the transcript. The issues of the cause were therefore not joined and it was impossible to determine what witnesses would be required to attend the trial in Shasta county. Until an answer is filed and the issues are joined a court may not lawfully determine the place of trial based upon the convenience of witnesses for the obvious reason there is no possibility of then ascertaining what witnesses may be required. Dawson v. Dawson, 83 Cal. App. 119, 256 P. 491; Wong Fung Hing v. San Francisco Relief & Red Cross Funds, 15 Cal. App. 537, 115 P. 331.

[3-6] It seems to have been contemplated by statute and the courts that a motion for change of venue shall be heard upon affidavits and the verified pleadings. At least this is the uniform practice in California. Section 396, Code Civ. Proc.; 5 Standard Ency. of Proc. p. 35; 40 Cyc. 156, § 3; Schilling v. Buhne, 139 Cal. 611, 73 P. 431; Cook v. Pendergast, 61 Cal. 72. The affidavits constitute the evidence upon which the validity of the order depends. The evidence is not a part of the judgment roll. Section 670, Code Civ. Proc. The clerk has no authority to certify to any part of the proceedings and record except what is properly included in the judgment roll together with the notice of appeal and demand for transcript. Pierce v. Works, 171 Cal. 684, 154 P. 852; Martin v. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co., 195 Cal. 544, 234 P. 321. The affidavits which were filed upon these counter motions to determine the place of trial in the present action are therefore not properly before this court on appeal. On the merits of the appeal, under such circumstances, this court would be required to presume that the orders in question were amply supported by affidavits. This however, is not a hearing on the merits, but is a mere motion to affirm the orders for the lack of a certificate of the trial judge as to the accuracy of the affidavits which appear in the record.

[7] Upon this motion to affirm the orders of the trial court, the affidavit of Herbert Choyinski, one of the attorneys for appellants, was filed, from which it appears that upon giving the notice of appeal and filing a demand for a clerk's transcript pursuant to section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, the defendants relied upon the clerk to present the record to the judge of that court for his certificate as required by the third paragraph of the last-mentioned section; that the clerk neglected to perform this duty and that the appellants had no knowledge of this omission until the present motion to affirm the said orders was served upon them on March 15, 1930; that the appellants thereupon promptly presented to the trial judge the necessary certificate, which he refused to sign on the erroneous assumption that it was unnecessary. It also appears that proceedings were pending at the time of this hearing to procure the necessary certificate of transcript, but that the appellants were unable to complete their application in the brief period of time which remained prior to this hearing.

We are therefore of the opinion that the appellants should be allowed time within which to institute appropriate proceedings to secure a record upon which this appeal may be heard on its merits.

The motion to affirm the order with relation to the proper place of trial is therefore denied without prejudice.

1. Appeal and error ⇨854(3) — Ruling on demurrer — Grounds — Court's reason.

Court's action in sustaining demurrer must be affirmed, regardless of reason given, if any ground of demurrer justifies ruling.

2. Specific performance ⇨62 — Collective bargaining contract.

Musicians' union held entitled to enforce collective bargaining contract calling for maintenance of minimum size orchestra in theaters (Civ. Code, § 3423; Code Civ. Proc. § 526).

The collective bargaining agreement covered a two-year period and provided for minimum sized orchestra in theaters in which sound devices were installed. Before the expiration of the period of the contract, certain theater owners installing talking devices proceeded to discharge their orchestras in violation of the terms of the contract, and thereupon the musicians' union brought suit to enforce the contract. The theater owners demurred to the complaint on the ground that the contract lacked mutuality and could not be enforced under Civ. Code, § 3423, and Code Civ. Proc. § 526. The union, on the other hand, claimed that the contract was one of mutual collective bargaining whereby terms and conditions and prices of employment were contracted for by mutual covenant enforceable by both parties.

TYLER, P. J.

This is a suit in equity to enforce the terms of a collective bargaining agreement with reference to labor and to prevent a breach thereof.

The pleadings show that plaintiffs are members of the Musicians' Union of San Francisco, an unincorporated association, composed of over a thousand members. The union has for its object the regulation of prices, business and working conditions of members of the musical profession, and it is authorized by the members thereof to fix the basic prices and the general terms and conditions under which musician services are to be rendered, and the members of the union agree to abide by any agreement established by it. Defendants are the owners and operators of certain theaters. The Allied Amusement Industries is authorized by certain of the theater owners to enter into and execute, for and in their behalf, contracts to cover and control the employment of members of the Musicians' Union and the members of their industry. In pursuance of his authority, the president of the union met with the employers through its trade organization to establish the terms, prices, and conditions under which the musicians would work. A contract was entered into in 1926 between the parties relating to this subject, which was to continue for a period of two years. Prior to its expiration the same parties entered into negotiations for a new agreement to govern both organizations for an additional period of two years. During the negotiations leading up to the consummation of this contract, it was recognized that theaters were apt to install the use of talking devices. To provide for this contingency, the theaters were classified into groups, and a provision was inserted in the proposed contract which provided that in theaters where such devices were installed, the minimum size of orchestra provided for in the different classifications should be maintained. The parties then agreed upon other changes in working and basic price conditions. Upon the completion of these and other arrangements, the union announced to its members the proposed terms and conditions of the new agreement which was to exist for a further two-year period. The agreement was satisfactory, and it was signed by both contracting parties and was fully performed by them until March 1, 1929, at which time the owners of certain of the theaters installed talking devices and thereafter proceeded to discharge their orchestras in violation of the terms of their contract. The Musicians' Union, acting on behalf of its members, thereupon made demand on respondents that they perform their contract. Certain of the respondents refused to employ any orchestra at all and have continued to operate the talking devices without one. Thereupon this suit was commenced.

[1] At the time of the filing of the complaint an order to show cause was made why an injunction should not be issued against respondents. A demurrer and answer were filed to the complaint. When the order to show cause came on for hearing, the trial court heard the demurrer before considering the order. The demurrer was both general and special, and among other things it alleged that the facts as set forth in the complaint did not constitute a cause of action in equity or law against respondents; that the contract sued upon was unilateral and void for want of mutuality and consideration; and, further, that equity will never decree performance of a contract involving personal services, except where such services are of an unique and extraordinary nature. The trial court thereupon sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the order to show cause. There is nothing in the minute order sustaining the demurrer, or in the judgment of dismissal, which in any manner indicates upon what ground the order of dismissal was based, except that it recites that it was sustained "upon the general grounds." The matter, however, is of no consequence.

Whatever the court's reasons may have been are not here controlling. If any of the grounds of demurrer presents sufficient justification for the ruling, regardless of the reasons given by the court, its action in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the action must be affirmed. If the grounds present no justification, its action must be reversed.

[2] Respondents here urge the argument:

(1) That the agreement sued upon is a mere declaration of usage resulting from collective bargaining; (2) that it lacks mutuality of obligation as well as of remedy; (3) that the alleged breach thereof by the theater owners did not vest in the Musicians' Union, or its members, any right to injunctive relief, mandatory or prohibitory—for which reasons the judgment of the lower court should be affirmed. It is contended for by appellants that the contract is not of the character claimed by respondents, but, on the contrary, is one of mutual collective bargaining made between the union, a labor organization on the one hand, and the theater owners as employers on the other, whereby terms, conditions, and prices of employment are contracted for by mutual covenants, equally binding upon employers and employees alike and enforceable by both parties; it being mutual in obligation and remedy and supported by a valuable consideration. It is agreed by both parties in view of the well-established equitable principles which have found expression in our Codes (section 3423, Civ. Code; section 526, Code Civ. Proc.) that if the contract is to be construed as one calling for personal services, it will not be enforced in equity. It is conceded by both parties that the contract is not one of that character. In support of their claim that it is a mere nudum pactum, lacking mutuality of obligation and remedy, respondents argue that while they are bound by the contract to employ at their respective theaters an orchestra composed of a specific number of persons who are members of the union, there is no corresponding duty or promise on the part of members of the union to perform services, and, further, that even conceding that they so promised, their contract in this particular could not be enforced by reason of the provisions contained in section 3423 of the Civil Code. Notwithstanding that the parties concede that the contract is not one calling for personal services, it is apparent that the question is so entwined and intermingled with contracts of that character it necessitates a discussion of the nature of both such contracts. While the question presented is one of first impression in this state, the subject has received consideration in different jurisdictions. It is only of recent years that labor differences came to be settled in collective bargaining agreements. These contracts were designed to do away with strikes and lockouts and prevent acts of violence through which employer, employee, and the public alike were all inconvenienced and suffered incalculable loss. The courts early recognized that these wasteful methods of settling disputes were archaic and they readily entertained, in the interest of public welfare, suits to enforce, where possible, contracts that had for their object industrial peace. Injunctions have frequently been issued on behalf of employers and against labor unions to prevent their officers and leaders from calling a strike or improperly persuading the members thereof to strike, by reason of the existence of contracts between the contending parties. Labor organizations have been slow to seek relief from the courts for breaches of collective bargaining contracts, but it would seem obvious that if a court, by injunction, has the power to prevent a contractual violation on the part of employees, it has equal power to prevent such violation on the part of the employer. If an injunction may issue in one case, it should issue in the other, as both cases should be measured by the same principle. Some of the earlier cases, following the reasoning of respondents, denied equitable relief to members of a union, holding that such contracts were for personal services and lacked mutuality or that an adequate remedy at law was provided for their breach. See Chambers v. Davis, 128 Miss. 613, 91 So. 346, 22 A. L. R. 114; Stone Cleaning Union v. Russell, 38 Misc. Rep. 513, 77 N. Y. S. 1049; Hudson v. Cincinnati Ry. Co., 152 Ky. 711, 154 S. W. 47, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 184, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 98. Other and more recent cases, while recognizing fully the general rules under which injunction is denied to enforce a contract for personal services, or where the applicant has an adequate remedy at law, or where he will not suffer irreparable injury, hold that the law keeps pace with the requirements of justice, and have expressed the opinion that none of these principles are applicable to contracts of the character here involved, as the facts are so extraordinary as to require injunctive relief if a plaintiff is to have any protection whatever in his contract rights. Thus in Schlesinger v. Quinto, 201 App. Div. 487, 194 N. Y. S. 401, the court affirmed an order granting an injunction restraining an association of employers from violating the terms of their contract. The court, after referring to the doctrine that there must be a mutuality of remedy as well as of obligation, and recognizing the principle that an injunction will not issue to compel one man to work for another, although he may have agreed so to do, held that cases of the character here involved do not arise out of individual employment. It then points out that two organizations, one composed of employers and the other of employees, have entered into an agreement; that each had power through the consent of its members to enter into a binding obligation in their behalf; that each had power through disciplinary methods to enforce compliance with the terms of the agreement; that the contract has mutual obligations binding on the parties thereto; that each party knows its obligation and the consequences of failure or refusal to perform those requirements; and that through the control of its members it can compel performance. Under such circumstances the court concluded that a decree of a court of equity could be enforced against either party and in favor of the other. The validity of such contracts and their enforceability is also recognized in Goldman v. Cohen, 222 App. Div. 631, 227 N. Y. S. 311. In discussing this question the court, in the course of its opinion, declared that the right to issue an injunction to prevent contractual violation of such contracts is well settled, and it held that where an employer is threatening to order a lockout of his employees, the right of a court of equity to prevent such contractual violation is measured by the same principle as the right of an employer to seek relief in equity to prevent a strike. It is there declared that if the union has not the right to invoke the aid of a court of equity to prevent the unlawful violation of such a contract, that it loses its force, and the right of collective bargaining is narrowed, and the economic benefits to the community arising therefrom is to a great extent lost. Again, the same principle was announced in Grassi Contracting Co. v. Bennett, 174 App. Div. 244, 160 N. Y. S. 279. There, plaintiff sought to enjoin the defendant from calling a strike which would have been in violation of a contract. It was held in substance that where a strike, or other action, is threatened by a labor union in violation of its contract, or of the contract of its members with their employers, the jurisdiction of a court of equity to issue an injunction is well recognized. See, also, Blum & Co. v. Landau, 23 Ohio App. 426, 155 N. E. 154; Burgess v. Georgia, F. & A. Ry., 148 Ga. 415, 96 S. E. 864; Gilchrist v. Metal Polishers Union (N. J. Ch.) 113 A. 320; Meltzer v. Kaminer, 131 Misc. Rep. 813, 227 N. Y. S. 459; Nederlandsch, etc., v. Stevedores' & Longshoremen's, etc., Soc. (D. C.) 265 F. 397. In Gregg v. Starks, 188 Ky. 834, 224 S. W. 459, the court, in departing from its original position, holds that the contracts are of such extraordinary character as to require equitable relief if the parties are to have any relief at all. To the same effect is the very recent case of Ribner v. Rosco Butter & Egg Co. (December, 1929) 135 Misc. Rep. 616, 238 N. Y. S. 132, where the cases on the subject are collected and extensively reviewed. All of these cases recognize that such contracts do not lack mutuality, but are founded on adequate consideration, enforceable in equity by injunction, there being, from their very nature, no adequate remedy at law for their breach, as they do not provide for the employment of any particular person. Schlesinger v. Quinto, supra; Goldman v. Cohen, supra.

[3, 4] In conclusion it may be stated that while some courts have granted equitable relief to employers and others have denied the same relief to labor unions, the better considered cases hold, as appellant contends for, that such contracts have mutual obligations binding upon both parties and enforceable in equity. Counsel for respondents has expressed the opinion that the later cases are based upon expediency rather than reason. We do not think so. Courts should, in the interest of public welfare, give recognition to the laudable efforts of groups to improve industrial conditions and prevent waste and violence, and where the parties have contracted with that end in view, their contracts should be enforced in a manner to give them effect if possible. In their enforcement the remedies applied should be, and they are, mutual. The law does not have one rule for the employer and another for the employee. In a court of justice they stand on an equal footing.

For the reasons given, the order of the court sustaining the general demurrer and the judgment dismissing the action are reversed.

BLODGETT v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SANTA BARBARA COUNTY. ★

Civ. 7106.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 11, 1930.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court May 15, 1930.

Contempt ☞2 — Proceeding — Answer — Letter insulting Judge — Challenge of qualification — New contempt.

Filing of answer, including letter insulting judge, as part of challenge to his qualification to hear contempt proceeding, held not new contempt.

Certiorari to Review an Order of the Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

On application for rehearing. Application denied.

For original opinion, see 286 P. 492.

D. T. Blodgett, in pro. per.

Schauer, Ryon & Goux, Heaney, Price & Postel and Atwell Westwick, all of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J.

On application for rehearing. In deciding this matter, we treated the order of respondent court as a single judgment, in which it was ordered that petitioner herein, Mr. Blodgett, be punished for the contempt referred to in the "order to show cause" issued in that court. In respondent's petition for rehearing, it is suggested that we failed to give sufficient consideration to the fact that the judgment, although entered as a single document, recites the commission of two separate acts of contempt and imposes a separate punishment for each one. The criticism is well founded, and calls for some addition to the opinion heretofore rendered.

The judgment is set forth in full in the return to the writ. From the recitals therein it appears that, in response to the order to show cause, Blodgett filed an answer in which he set forth his objection to the hearing by Judge Collier of the contempt proceeding, and stated that the alleged feeling of the judge against Blodgett was occasioned by the receipt of a letter from Blodgett, a copy of which letter was annexed as an exhibit to the answer. It may be conceded at once that said letter contained exceedingly offensive statements concerning the judge. The judgment further recites that Blodgett presented said answer to the court as his answer to the citation when the same came on for hearing, and that Blodgett in open court, and while the court was in session, stated that he desired said answer also to apply to the hearing of the demurrer in the then pending action in which Blodgett is plaintiff. Following said recitals it was adjudged that, by reason of the said acts and conduct of the said Blodgett while in court, Blodgett was and is guilty of contempt of court.

Petitioner Blodgett, in support of his claim that he had the right to use said letter as a part of his answer in the contempt proceeding, and in support of his challenge of the right of the judge to act in said matter, relies on the decision of the Supreme Court in Works v. Superior Court, 130 Cal. 304, 62 P. 507, 508. In that case it was held in substance that, in making objection to the hearing of a cause or proceeding by a judge upon grounds of bias or prejudice, the party so objecting cannot be held guilty of contempt of court in making the objection, or in supporting it by proof, "unless he goes out of his way to introduce something purposely and gratuitously offensive." It may be said in the case at bar, as was held in the cited case, that, since there is no finding or recital or charge that the affidavit was presented otherwise than respectfully and properly, except in so far as an improper motive or intention can be inferred from the supposed irrelevancy and immateriality of the statements, it is clear that the contempt, if any, consisted wholly in the assertion in the affidavit of matter irrelevant and immaterial to the issue. We are of the opinion that (following the ruling announced in Works v. Superior Court, supra) we should hold that, notwithstanding that the letter in question contained matters which were reflections upon the judge and even insulting to him, nevertheless the mere filing and presentation of such answer, including said letter, as a part of Blodgett's challenge to the qualification of the judge to hear the original contempt proceeding, did not of itself constitute a new act of contempt committed in relation to the contempt proceeding instituted by the order to show cause. For further discussions based upon Works v. Superior Court, supra, see Webb v. Superior Court, 28 Cal. App. 391, 152 P. 957, and In re Lake, 65 Cal. App. 420, 224 P. 126.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

NELSON v. PARKER et al.★
Civ. 6774.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
March 29, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 28, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 26, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1002 — Review — Verdict — Conflicting evidence.

Verdict for plaintiff, based on conflicting evidence in malpractice action for negligent extraction of teeth, held binding on appellate court.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1001(1) — Review — Verdict — Slight evidence.

Verdict for plaintiff, in action for malpractice in extracting teeth, would not be disturbed, notwithstanding evidence of negligence was slight.

3. Physicians and surgeons ⇨18(9) — Extraction of tooth — Negligence — Question for jury.

Negligence of dentist in extracting tooth which dropped down patient's throat held for jury in malpractice action.

4. Trial ⇨243 — Instructions — Conflict — Malpractice action.

Instructions on negligence in extracting teeth and on negligence in failing to recover tooth from patient's throat held not conflicting.

The instruction on negligence in extracting teeth was to the effect that what was proper practice, in extracting teeth by dentist, was a question for experts and could be established only by their testimony, while instruction on negligence in failing to recover tooth was to the effect that if act or omission of dentist was of such nature as to warrant jury in saying whether act or omission was negligence as matter of common knowledge, then jury could find such act or omission, if any, to be negligence without resorting to expert testimony.

5. Physicians and surgeons ⇨14(4) — Dentist — Representation — Reasonable degree of skill.

All that dentist represents in treating patient is that he possesses reasonable degree of skill possessed by others of his profession in same locality, and that he will use reasonable care in application thereof.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1) — Harmless error — Admission of testimony — Expert opinion.

In action for malpractice, in extracting tooth which dropped down patient's throat, error in admitting doctor's opinion on cause of pneumonia held not prejudicial.

The opinion of the doctor was based on hearsay evidence, but there was testimony as to the position of the tooth in the patient's lungs given by several other witnesses.

7. Physicians and surgeons ⇨18(8) — Alter ego of corporation — Personal liability.

Evidence in malpractice action held to establish individual defendant was alter ego of corporate defendant, and hence liable individually.

The defendant dentist testified that he had corporation formed to protect his business and that he was general manager of corporation, and the evidence disclosed that with the dentist's knowledge and consent his pictures were placed on windows and doors of the dental offices and on the literature of the corporation, and that the dentist had charge of the personnel of the dental corporation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Homer R. Spence, Judge.

Action by Roy Nelson, a minor, by C. C. Nelson, his guardian ad litem, against Painless Parker, also known as E. R. Parker, and Painless Parker Dentist, also known as the E. R. Parker System. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for appellants.

E. C. Gridley, of San Bernardino, and Dunn, White & Aiken, Hamilton Wright, and W. M. Nold, all of Oakland, for respondent.

DEASY, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages from the defendants for alleged malpractice. On or about the 18th day of February, 1918, plaintiff, who at that time was between 6 and 7 years old, was taken by his mother to a dental office at Twelfth and Broadway streets, in the city of Oakland, to have a dentist examine him. He had suffered from a severe toothache for two nights before. The name Painless Parker Dentist appeared on the doors and windows of the office, and pictures of Dr. Painless Parker were similarly displayed. Upon examination of the boy's mouth, the dentist in charge, Dr. E. T. Mohney, stated that two teeth were in bad shape and should be removed. With the consent of the mother he proceeded to extract the two teeth. One of them he removed from the boy's mouth, but the other slipped out of the forceps and disappeared. Dr. Mohney searched for it, examined the boy's mouth and put his fingers down the boy's throat, but failed to find the missing tooth. Plaintiff immediately began choking or coughing, and the spell continued for some minutes, after which he seemed improved and was taken home. That night he had a chill and became quite sick. According to the record, he suffered from cough and loss of breath and had several attacks of pneumonia and was quite sick and ailing at intervals during a period of several years thereafter, and was attended by many doctors. Finally, in October, 1924, according to plaintiff's testimony, he had a very severe coughing spell one day on the street, and coughed up the tooth, after which his health improved, and he became more like a normal boy of his age than he had been prior to that time.

The case was tried before a jury, which brought in a verdict in plaintiff's favor against both defendants for the sum of $12,500. From the judgment rendered on this verdict, defendants have appealed.

The record is very voluminous, a great deal of testimony having been introduced to show the condition of plaintiff before and after the extraction of the teeth. There is no need to review it in detail here, since, while there is a great deal of dispute between the parties on the question as to whether the lost tooth was ever in plaintiff's lung or bronchial tubes, there was a conflict in the evidence on the subject, which the jury has resolved in plaintiff's favor, and this court is bound by that finding. Furthermore, the questions raised by appellants do not involve the sufficiency of the evidence on that point.

[1, 2] Appellants do contend, however, that the evidence is insufficient to show negligence on the part of defendants or their agent. The briefs contain quite an elaborate presentation of the conflicting views of the parties on this question, but it is quite apparent that there is testimony in the record which, if believed by the jury, was sufficient to justify the finding of negligence. Without attempting any analysis of the evidence, we think it will be sufficient merely to refer generally to the testimony of the boy's mother as to what Dr. Mohney did in extracting the teeth, and to Dr. Mohney's testimony as to how he held his fingers, and to the expert testimony of Dr. Parker and other dentists who were called by plaintiff, and who described to the jury in detail the manner in which the operating dentist should hold his fingers in order to guard against a tooth dropping down the throat of the patient. All of this created a conflict which when resolved by the jury became binding upon this court, and cannot be disturbed. In addition to the evidence contained in the transcript, it appears from the record that Dr. Mohney, Dr. Parker, and others, illustrated to the jury, by the use of their fingers and with a model, the correct way that the fingers should be held during the operation. There is no way in which we can visualize these illustrations, nor can we indulge in speculation or conjecture concerning them. In accordance with the fundamental principles governing us we must conclude that the illustrations, coupled with the oral testimony of the witnesses, furnished a proper basis for the action of the jury.

Appellants' next contention is that in an action of this kind expert evidence is necessary to establish the negligence, and that there being none, the judgment should be reversed. We will agree with the first part of this proposition partially only, for reasons which will later be more particularly referred to. But as has been said heretofore, there was some testimony of experts relative to what should have been done by the operating dentist, and it was for the jury to determine the facts. They saw and heard the witnesses and saw the gestures which illustrated the proper thing to be done, and were in a better position to resolve the conflict than is an appellate court. It is true that the evidence of negligence in the instant case was slight, and its probative value may not be great, but we may not interfere with the finding of the jury on that account. As has been said by the Supreme Court in a recent case, "Where the verdict of the jury and the judgment based thereon may be sustained on any reasonable theory, it will not be disturbed by an appellate court." Rocha v. Garcia, 203 Cal. 167, 263 P. 238, 240.

[3] Appellants also claim that their motion for a nonsuit should have been granted, and also that the court should have granted their motion for a directed verdict. Our views as to the state of the evidence preclude us from any further consideration of these claims. If there were any evidence upon which the jury could find a verdict for plaintiff, the case should have been submitted to them. There was no error in the denial of the motions.

[4] Appellants next claim that it was error for the court to give instruction No. 28, which reads as follows: "You are hereby instructed that if you find from a preponderance of the evidence that any act or omission, or acts or omissions, if any, of the defendants, or either of the defendants, or any of their or either of their servants, agents or employees, acting within the scope of their employment, was of such a nature as would warrant you in saying whether or not it was negligence as a matter of common knowledge, then I charge you that you may find such act or omission, or acts or omissions, if any, to be negligence, without resorting to expert testimony as the basis of your finding, and I further instruct you that if you find from a preponderance of the evidence that such act or omission, or acts or omissions, if any, proximately caused the injury or injuries or any of them, herein complained of, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover against such defendant or defendants."

Two other instructions concerning the same general subject-matter were given by the court.

No. 27 is very similar to No. 28, and reads as follows: "You are instructed that unless you find from a preponderance of the evidence that any act or omission, or acts or omissions, if any you find, by defendants, or either of the defendants, or any of their or either of their servants, agents or employees, acting within the scope of their employment, was of such a nature as to warrant you in saying whether or not it was negligence as a matter of common knowledge, then you must make your findings as to whether or not the defendants, or either of the defendants, or any of their or either of their servants, agents or employees, acting within the scope of their employment, were negligent, from a consideration only of the testimony of competent witnesses, that is, a dentist or dentists, and that the testimony of other witnesses upon this point cannot be considered."

No. 40 is apparently the very antithesis of these two, and is as follows: "You are hereby instructed that what is or is not proper practice in the performance of an extraction by a dentist, or what is or is not the usual practice, is a question for experts, and can be established only by their testimony. In other words, in determining such issue, you must base your findings on the testimony of dentists who have been produced as experts in this action."

[5] There is no distinction between an action against a dentist for malpractice and a similar one against a physician. Each is specially trained for his work in a highly technical calling. The rules of law applicable to the one are applicable to the other. It is well settled in this state that neither can be held to guarantee the results of his professional services, and that all that either undertakes or represents in treating a patient is that he possesses that reasonable degree of skill and learning possessed by others of his profession in the same locality, and that he will use reasonable and ordinary care and skill in the application of such knowledge to accomplish the purpose for which he was employed. Houghton v. Dickson, 29 Cal. App. 321, 155 P. 128; Perkins v. Trueblood, 180 Cal. 437, 181 P. 642.

The rule announced by the trial court in instruction No. 40 is a correct statement of the law as applied to the more technical matters of dentistry or surgery, but it has not an application which is universal. Many things may happen in the course of a dental operation to extract a tooth or teeth, which, to any person possessed of normal faculties, would appear to be negligent, just as the same situation would in the course of a surgical operation, where a sponge or a forceps or a surgical needle or a piece of a steel spring were left in the body of the patient after the operation had been concluded. And so it might well be that, if a dentist dropped a tooth into the throat of a patient, and did not use the methods which common knowledge would suggest to an ordinary person in an endeavor to recover it, the testimony of experts would not be necessary to establish negligence in such a case.

"Expert testimony is not required, however, where the results of the treatment are of such character as to warrant the inference of want of care from the testimony of laymen or in the light of the knowledge and experience of the jurors themselves. That some facts tending to establish plaintiff's case may have been shown by non-expert testimony is not objectionable." 48 Corpus Juris, 1151.

Where a surgeon in an operation loses a metallic spring in the wound and fails to remove it, it authorizes the jury to infer negligence without the aid of expert evidence. Wharton v. Warner, 75 Wash. 470, 135 P. 235.

In Vergeldt v. Hartzell (C. C. A.) 1 F.(2d) 633, it was held that where the question in issue in an action against a physician or surgeon is not one of skill in treatment or the performance of an operation, but of plain negligence and failure to use proper care, as to which a layman is as competent to judge as another physician or surgeon, it is not one which must be determined solely by the testimony of experts.

In this case, Mrs. Nelson, the mother of plaintiff, testified that as the forceps were applied it seemed but an instant until the child started strangling and choking; that he turned black and fought until he was exhausted for breath; that the doctor and the nurse, after she came in, hunted for the teeth; that the dentist ran his finger down the patient's throat three times; that the dentist said that a tooth had gotten away; that the nurse went for the head nurse, and when she arrived the dentist was still working with the patient, that is, ran his finger down his throat; that the dentist turned to Mrs. Nelson and told her to give the patient a good laxative so that if the tooth had passed into his stomach it would pass on, and to watch him carefully; that the patient had perspired terribly from the choking; and that after he felt better the dentist and nurse looked for the teeth, looked on the floor, picked up the forceps, and again looked on the floor to see if the teeth could be found; that one of the nurses took part in trying to find the tooth in the boy's throat; that she ran her finger down his throat once; that there was nothing else done by either the dentist or the nurse with the patient relative to locating the tooth after the teeth were extracted, other than looking on the floor and running their fingers down his throat, and raising his head and wiping his face two or three times.

She further testified that she returned to the office of the dentist in April, 1920, to see about having some X-rays taken. She had X-rays taken in May, 1920, by a Dr. Peters, which showed a foreign body.

In the complaint several acts of negligence were charged. Negligence in the extraction was one of them. Instruction No. 40 was correctly given as applied to that matter. Negligence in looking for the tooth and in failing to recover it was also charged in the complaint, and some of the evidence tending to support that charge has been referred to. As to these matters, instructions Nos. 27 and 28 would apply. There is not such a contradiction between No. 40 and Nos. 27 and 28 as would leave the jury in doubt as to which rule to follow. The instructions taken as a whole were correct statements of the law, and no error appears that would justify a reversal.

[6] The objection to the question put to the witness, Dr. Alice Smith, concerning her opinion as to what caused the attack of pneumonia for which she treated plaintiff in 1924, should have been sustained. It is apparent from the deposition of the witness that the opinion she gave was based on hearsay. She relied on information given to her by the boy's mother as to the presence of the tooth in the boy's lung. She could have been and should have been asked a hypothetical question as a medical expert, and then her answer would be proper. But the error in admitting this answer was not prejudicial, since testimony as to the position of the tooth in the boy's lung was given by several other witnesses.

[7] It is also claimed by appellants that there can be no recovery against Dr. Painless Parker as an individual, in any event. In support of this claim it is urged that the evidence shows that Dr. Parker was merely an employee of Painless Parker Dentist, a corporation, and, therefore, not liable for the acts of any other employee. If this were the true state of facts, we would agree, but it seems to us that under the evidence he was more than an employee. Dr. Parker was sworn as a witness in the case, and, among other things, testified that he had referred to himself for many years as "Painless" Parker, and that he was generally known by that name in a business way, and that he had his name changed from E. R. Parker to Painless Parker to protect his business, and also that he had a corporation formed for the same purpose. It is true that he also testified that he was not an officer or director of the corporation, but was its general manager. He claimed to be merely an employee, but it seems quite apparent from the evidence and from the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, notwithstanding his protestations to the contrary, that to all intents and purposes he and the corporation were one and the same. It was his alter ego, and without his guiding hand could not function. He caused the corporation to be formed; he was one of the incorporators; he was its general manager; with his knowledge and consent, his picture was on the windows and doors of the dental offices, and on the literature of the corporation; he had charge of the personnel; he instructed the dentists employed as to the methods of the E. R. Parker system, he checked up at various times to see that they followed that system; he originated the system; and generally he had active supervision constantly over the affairs and the general business of the corporation. It would seem to require no further discussion on this point to determine that it is without merit, and that both the corporation, Painless Parker, and the individual, Painless Parker, are so related that they stand or fall together.

It is finally claimed that the court erred in giving certain instructions on the question of ostensible agency. The objection comes principally from the individual defendant, and in view of our conclusion as to the virtual identity of the parties, this objection is likewise without merit.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record, the judgment should be, and it is, hereby, affirmed.

Municipal corporations — 159(1) — Councilmen — Recall — Petition — Signers.

Petitions demanding recall of particular councilmen could not be considered in determining whether joint petition seeking removal of all had sufficient signers (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128).

Both joint and separate petitions were circulated and signed by electors, and all petitions were filed as a single petition with the city clerk. St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128, provides that, in order to invoke recall of official of incorporated city or town, petition must be signed by qualified voters equal in number to 25 per cent. of entire vote cast for the office at the last preceding regular municipal election at which officer was voted for. At the last election 1,589 votes were cast for the office of councilman. Only 394 qualified electors signed the joint petition, whereas the number required for recall election was 398.

Writ denied.

Frank J. Lavan, of Culver City, and Russell W. Kuhn, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

John J. Dillon, City Atty., and Lawrence Scherb, both of Culver City, and Clarence B. Conlin, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NORTON, Justice pro tem.

This is an original proceeding brought by petitioner, who is a qualified elector of Culver City, a city of the sixth class, to secure a writ of mandate directed to the city council of that city directing them to call a special election to determine whether the city councilmen thereof, Houck, Bobier, Clark, Coombs, and Kinkead, should be removed from office and their successors elected. The clerk filed his certificate that the petition is sufficient as to councilmen Houck and Bobier, but insufficient as to Clark, Coombs, and Kinkead. The clerk is made a party to the suit, and as to him it is alleged that he made a false and fraudulent estimate of the number of electors signing said petition, and wrongfully eliminated certain signatures from the petition and failed to count them. The answer to the petition having raised issues of fact, a referee was appointed to try the issues and make findings, which, pursuant to the order appointing, have been returned to this court, together with a transcript of the testimony taken upon the hearing before him, and from which it appears that during the month of November, 1928, recall petitions identical in form in which all the trustees were named and their removal demanded were circulated among the electors of Culver City. The persons espousing the recall movement being advised that not more than one officer could be included in a petition for recall, they desisted in circulating these joint petitions. In the month of October, 1929, substantially nine months after they had abandoned obtaining signatures to the joint petition, five separate petitions, each naming one of the five councilmen, were circulated, and these were signed—some electors signing all five of the petitions, and others refusing to sign as against some of the councilmen who were sought to be recalled. It further appears that during the month of November, 1929, both forms of petitions were being circulated and signed by electors; that these joint and several petitions were filed as one petition with the city clerk on November 22, 1929, and, the clerk having certified that the petition was insufficient as to three of the councilmen, a supplemental petition naming all of the councilmen and in the same form as the first petition circulated in which they were all named was circulated and filed as a part of the original petition. The city clerk in making his estimate of the number of qualified electors signing the petition for the recall of the five councilmen did not include those who had signed the petitions in which the councilmen were proceeded against separately and in which each of the five petitions contained only the name of a single councilman. Unless these separate petitions are included therein, the joint petition is not signed in sufficient numbers to authorize the calling of the recall election demanded by it. The contention of defendants is that the petition filed as it was did not constitute one petition, and we think they are right in this claim. The petition consisted of seventy-seven pages, each page being a separate petition, that is, each page or sheet was a complete petition in itself stating the grounds of the recall and demanding recall of all the councilmen en bloc or demanding the recall of a particular councilman.

As far as they are duplicates, it is the rule supported by authority that they can be presented together and shall constitute one petition. The joint and separate petitions cannot be so regarded.

The petition demanding the recall of all of the councilmen cannot be said to be the same as a petition demanding the removal of only one, nor can a petition requesting the recall of "A" be said to be the same as a petition to recall "B," so as to permit them all to be presented together as one petition.

As far as the joint petition for recall was concerned, the voter must have, when it was presented to him, signed to recall all five of the councilmen against whom it was directed or refrain from signing it at all. If he was in favor of recalling one of the councilmen only, he would have to sign another and different petition from the joint petition being circulated, to wit, a petition demanding the recall of that particular official alone, and he could not be made a party to the petition demanding the recall of the councilmen collectively by annexing his petition directed to a single councilman to the joint petition which asked for the recall of all the councilmen, a proceeding to which he was opposed and in which he did not concur. One group of electors may be strongly opposed to the recall of all the council en bloc, but would favor a recall of one or two thereof. Another group would favor the recall of all or none. Still another would favor the recall of only one of the council. Could separate petitions circulated by each of these groups be presented as one petition expressive of the demand or intent of one of these groups? We think not. It would result in unfairness to the electors, and the apparent and not real consent of an elector would be obtained to a petition in which he would not join and which he did not favor.

The statute provides that, in order to invoke the recall an official of an incorporated city or town, the petition therefor "shall be signed by qualified voters equal in number to at least twenty-five per cent of the entire vote cast * * * for the office which the incumbent sought to be removed occupies, at the last preceding regular municipal election at which such officer was voted for." Chapter 32, Stats., Extra Session, 1911. In construing this provision of the statute in the case of Magoon v. Heath, 79 Cal. App. at page 635, 250 P. 583, 584, it was held that the "intent of the Legislature in providing for 25 per cent. of the entire vote cast was to give some assurance that there was a substantial demand for the removal of an elective officer before the recall might be invoked, and in providing that it should be the last general municipal election we think it is apparent that they had in mind that in the rapidly growing incorporated cities and towns the vote cast at the last regular municipal election might be considerably larger than at previous regular municipal elections and that the phrase 'at which such officer was voted for,' in the act, is meant to designate the office and not the individual who may occupy that office." At the last regular municipal election held in the city of Culver City there were cast for the office of councilmen which defendants Houck, Bobier, Clark, Coombs, and Kinkad occupy

1,589 votes. The number of qualified electors necessary to sign a petition to recall said officers is 398. The referee found that the joint petition was signed by 394 qualified electors of Culver City, less than 25 per cent. of the vote cast for the office of councilman at the last municipal election. The separate petitions were signed by not to exceed in any instance 45 qualified electors. The joint and several petitions were therefore under the view we have taken insufficient to either demand the collective recall of the defendant councilmen or the recall of any single councilman. The finding of the referee as to the number of voters signing the petitions is not attacked, and, it appearing therefrom that the number of signers to the petitions are as above set forth, and by reason thereof and the view we have taken, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the question as to whether the city clerk of Culver City fraudulently estimated the number of qualified electors signing the petitions or fraudulently refused to count certain signers on the petitions for recall.

The issuance of a peremptory writ of mandamus is denied.

MAGNAVOX CO. v. JONES.
Civ. 6934.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 5, 1930.

1. Corporations ⇨406(1) — Contract — Authority.

Contract is not binding on corporation, unless made on its behalf by some one with authority.

2. Corporations ⇨432(12) — Contract — Authorized execution — Evidence — Sufficiency.

Evidence held insufficient to establish authorized execution of exclusive sales contract on behalf of corporation.

3. Corporations ⇨426(10) — Contract — Benefits — Estoppel — Ratification.

Purchase of small amount of goods on assurance of director that exclusive sales contract was all right was not receipt of benefits by corporation working estoppel to avoid contract nor ratification of director's acts.

The purchaser, after failing to procure surety bond as required by original agreement, attempted to furnish other security, and, without securing acceptance of contract by corporate action, purchased a few hundred dollars worth of goods, the amount being negligible compared with time contract was to run and amount of money involved.

4. Sales ⇨183 — Purchase in anticipation of exclusive contract — Purchase price — Liability.

Purchaser of goods of corporation in anticipation of exclusive sales contract was liable for purchase price, where contract was not executed.

McKENZIE, Justice pro tem.

During the first week of September, 1926, a Mr. Osborne, who had done business with plaintiff, which is a corporation having seven directors, but was not a director or officer of plaintiff, called defendant's attention to the possibility of obtaining from plaintiff corporation an exclusive sales contract for Magnaray electric heaters, a product manufactured by plaintiff. In turn Mr. Osborne introduced defendant to Mr. Travers, who was a director and general sales manager for plaintiff. At this meeting the proposition of Mr. Jones' obtaining an exclusive sales contract was discussed in a general way, and a few days later, at Mr. Travers' request, Jones went to Mr. Travers' office, and then and there negotiations began in earnest regarding the exclusive sales contract. After the negotiations started, there were three representatives of plaintiff that discussed the proposition with Jones; namely, Mr. Travers, sales manager; Mr. Steers, president; and Mr. Sperry, treasurer. All three were directors of the corporation. There were four other directors, but Jones had no dealings or talk with the others. After the first meeting, the negotiations were mostly between Jones and Sperry. After several meetings, one at least of which was at the office of plaintiff's attorneys it was agreed that the sales contract should include Magnalux lamps as well as Magnaray heaters. The two articles were to constitute one contract, but the attorney preparing the contract directed the attention of the parties to the difficulty of embodying the terms relating to the two articles in one document owing to the fact that the territory covered, the terms, discounts, etc., were so different. It was then agreed that the conditions and terms for the heaters would be set forth in one paper and the lamps in another. Whereupon the two forms of contract, Defendant's Exhibits A and B, were prepared. The entire controversy involved in this action centers around those exhibits and the actions of the parties concerning them.

Exhibits A and B on their face appear to contain all the terms and conditions of a very complicated exclusive sales agreement, and it would take pages to quote them. We deem it only necessary to specifically direct attention to two of the provisions. In the first place, the contracts (and by this term we mean only the documents) show that the plaintiff was making a departure from maintaining its own sales organization in eight of the Pacific Coast states and British Columbia, and in lieu thereof was to sell for ten years to none other than defendant, who agreed to purchase a minimum quantity of each article, amounting to approximately $2,000,000 during the ten-year period. In the second place, the contract relating to Magnaray heaters provided: "17. Guaranty. Contemporaneously with the execution and delivery of this agreement, and as a part of the same transaction, distributor will furnish the manufacturer with a valid bond or other instrument of security satisfactory to manufacturer, guaranteeing and securing the performance by the distributor of his agreement to purchase the minimum quantities of heaters specified in paragraph 4 hereof and his agreement to pay for the same as herein provided. Said bond or instrument of security shall be satisfactory to manufacturer and in such form as the manufacturer shall prescribe and with such security, securities or guarantors as it may approve and shall be in the principal sum of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000.00). This sum shall be increased to twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars ($22,500.00) on or before the expiration of the first year of said contract. * * *" The Magnalux contract contained a similar clause, except that the amount of the bond was $8,750.

Those proposed contracts, Exhibits A and B, were handed Jones on September 18, and two days later he signed both, and left them with Mr. Travers at the office of the company to be signed by the corporation. Jones was told by Mr. Travers "that the contracts would have to be referred to their board meeting, which was held every Friday, and they would be approved by the board and signed at that time." On September 21, and after Jones had signed the contracts, Jones called at the company's office, and told

Mr. Sperry he could not get a surety company to go on his bond. From now on we will quote Jones' testimony only where there is a conflict. When Jones told Sperry he could not get a bond, the latter suggested he offer some other security. A contract of sale of real estate owned by Jones on which there was due $16,000 was discussed. Jones brought the real estate contract to Sperry, who made a copy of it so that an assignment could be prepared for approval, and then Jones took the original away and never returned it. A form of assignment was never prepared nor were the terms or conditions of the assignment agreed upon or discussed. On September 28 Mr. Sperry told Jones the security was approved (how a security of this kind could be approved in the absence of an assignment containing terms and conditions is not explained), and for him to get his sales organization working as rapidly as possible. On the strength of Mr. Sperry's statement, Jones claims he commenced ordering Magnaray heaters and Magnalux lamps, and spent considerable money in preparing to start business without having the contract signed by the corporation or making investigation as to the action of the board of directors. The only action of the board is contained in the following resolution: "Minutes of the Directors' Meeting of the Magnavox Company held at the company's office on September 24, 1926, Present: President Frank M. Steers in the chair, Directors Folsom, O'Connor, Pridham, Sperry and Travers. Absent: Director Sullivan. Director Travers submitted to the Board drafts of two proposed contracts with Horace D. Jones who intends to form a company for distribution of High Duty Magnaray heaters and Magna-Lux lamps. The contracts for both heaters and lamps to be for ten years. The new company proposes to purchase the first year heaters to the amount of $60,000.00 increasing by a graduated scale until reaching in the fifth year the sum of $250,000.00 remaining at this amount during balance of term of contract. The new Company agrees to put up a bond in favor of The Magnavox Company equivalent to 25% of estimated purchases for the year. In regard to the lamps the new Company proposes to purchase a minimum of 35,000 lamps and put up a bond for 25% of their value. Territory to be covered in both cases includes California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Nevada, Arizona, Utah and a portion of Montana, and Province of British Columbia in the Dominion of Canada. Upon motion duly made, seconded, and carried unanimously, it was Resolved: That the President and Secretary be authorized to execute a contract with Horace D. Jones, covering High Duty heaters, also contract covering Magna-Lux lamps, these contracts substantially as now written. Seal of the Company.

Signed and certified by F. V. Moulin, Secretary, The Magnavox Company." On October 4, Jones not having furnished bonds or other security as provided for in the contracts, plaintiff withdrew its offer as embodied in the contracts.

In June, 1927, plaintiff brought suit to recover $686.69, the value of the goods bought by Jones during the negotiations, and defendant sought by way of cross-complaint to recover from plaintiff damages in the sum of $2,186.94 for expenses incurred in preparing to do business and $60,000 for loss of prospective profits. At the commencement of the trial a rather indefinite stipulation was entered into concerning plaintiff's cause of action, which we interpret as follows: "It is stipulated that certain articles were bought from plaintiff by defendant; that they have not been paid for; that disregarding the aforesaid dealings between the parties, the regular price of said wares is $686.69, and defendant owes plaintiff this amount unless the dealings between the parties effected a different price." When the evidence was concluded, the court, on motion of plaintiff, directed the jury to find for plaintiff in the sum of $686.69, and to find for cross-defendant on defendant's cross-complaint. The jury followed the court's instructions. This appeal is predicated on the court's so instructing the jury.

Mr. Jones testified that at all times it was contemplated by him and plaintiff that any contract they might enter into should be reduced to writing and signed by both parties. The contracts were never signed by plaintiff.

[1-3] "To properly prove a contract claimed to be binding on a corporation, it should be shown that it was made on its behalf by someone who had authority to act for it. It must be shown that the officer was expressly authorized, or that the act was fairly within the implied powers incidental to his office, or that the corporation is estopped to deny his authority by reason of having accepted the benefit of the contract or otherwise. Where the corporate seal is used there is, of course, a presumption of authority, but where the seal is not used, the authority must otherwise affirmatively appear." Cal. Jur. vol. 6, p. 1095. The contemplated contract was not such as are made in the ordinary course of business; Jones knew that its terms had to be approved by the board of directors. He never complied with the terms of the proposed agreement, but negotiated with one of the directors to have different terms substituted in the contract. When he was negotiating with Sperry, he knew that he (Sperry) had no authority to change the terms of the proposed contract without the approval of the directors. The board of directors never approved or ratified any change. In fact, defendant's whole case is predicated on the fact that Sperry misled him in regard to what the directors would do or had done. "Individual directors are not the corporation's agents, and it is well settled, that declarations and admissions of individual directors, when not acting as a board, are not binding on the corporation, nor admissible as evidence against it, unless they were acting at the time as its authorized agents, and within the scope of their authority." Fletcher, Cyc. Corp., vol. 3, § 2168. A single director having no authority to act for the corporation otherwise than as a member of the board of directors cannot bind it by ratification of an unauthorized contract; and knowledge and acquiescence of a minority of the board is not ratification. Fletcher, Cyc. Corp. vol. 4, § 2188.

The fact that Jones for four or five days bought goods of the value of a few hundred dollars from plaintiff on the strength of Sperry's assurance that everything was all right and to go ahead was not the receipt by plaintiff of such benefit as would work an estoppel nor was it a ratification of Sperry's acts. Compared with the time the contract was to run and the amount of money involved those transactions were negligible. The plaintiff promptly repudiated Sperry's unauthorized acts if any. We are not deciding in this opinion that Sperry did or said what defendant claims nor that what Sperry said if anything warranted defendant in incurring expense until the contract was signed. The recitals and conclusions herein have only reference to the action of the trial court in directing a verdict in favor of plaintiff on defendant's cross-complaint which we conclude it was justified in doing. There was but one proposed contract; notwithstanding it was to be evidenced by two documents this contract provided that two bonds or other security in the sum of $15,000 and $8,750 respectively, satisfactory to plaintiff, were to be furnished by Jones. According to Jones' own testimony, he could not furnish a surety bond, which evidently was what he had in mind when negotiations started; and the very most that Jones did or attempted to do was to try and get, through an unauthorized agent, plaintiff to accept not only different surety but in a less amount; and this he never succeeded in doing. On October 4th the plaintiff told defendant it would go no further with the negotiations concerning the proposed original contract, owing to his financial inability. When he was told this, he did not then or at any later time offer to furnish the security provided for in the contract or any security. It is true there is a conflict in the evidence concerning what statements were made by Sperry to Jones; but there is no conflict about Sperry's not having authority to act for the corporation or about Jones' knowledge of this fact.

It may be fairly inferred from the whole record that Jones abandoned the venture.

[4] Concerning the trial court's action in directing a verdict against defendant on plaintiff's complaint for wares bought by defendant from plaintiff pending negotiations prior to the execution of the exclusive sales agreement, the record shows that the first order was given on September 21st. This was before defendant claims Sperry told him the directors had agreed to terms different to those contained in the contract, and furthermore Jones placed orders after the 4th day of October, when he was told negotiations concerning the proposed contract were ended. From this it appears that defendant commenced to buy from plaintiff before any controversy arose about the security and continued to buy after this particular contract had been discarded. The goods were sold at the prices specified in the contract, which were lower than regular prices. It is apparent, when the parties began to buy and sell, they anticipated the contract would be executed. Because the contract was not executed, owing to the fault of defendant, is no reason why the defendant should not pay for the goods he bought during the interim. Having in mind the stipulation concerning plaintiff's demand, the court was justified in directing this verdict.

The judgment is affirmed.

MARKS, Acting P. J.

On December 16, 1929, the district attorney of San Bernardino county filed an information in the superior court charging appellant and Julian Hacker with the crime of burglary. Hacker entered a plea of guilty and appellant went to trial upon his plea of not guilty. The jury found appellant guilty of burglary in the second degree.

On November 26, 1929, the office of the Shell Oil Company of California, situated in the town of Narod in San Bernardino county, Cal., was burglarized and a safe containing about $130 in cash was removed therefrom. The safe was later found in a wash about two miles from the place of the burglary. It had been broken open and all the money except 25 cents removed therefrom. The office building containing the safe was entered through a window, the screen from which had been torn off and the window forced open. The front door had been broken open and the safe apparently rolled or carried out through it. Footprints were found outside of the window and also near the place where the safe was found. A detailed examination of them disclosed that there was a small triangle and the word "Revere" on both heels, and on that portion of the print made by the heel of the shoe worn on the left foot was an impression showing a defect in the rubber where it had either been worn or torn near one corner of this heel. At the time of his arrest appellant was wearing a pair of shoes that made tracks identical in shape and appearance with those found, even to the defect in the heel of the left shoe. Prints from these shoes were compared with the prints on the ground by having the appellant place his feet incased in these shoes in the dirt adjoining these tracks outside of the window of the office. After his arrest and subsequent to his making the second set of tracks outside of the window of the burglarized office, the police officers took the shoes from appellant, and it was then found that he had attempted to obliterate the name "Revere" and the triangle from the heels. Upon being asked why he attempted this, he replied, "Well, you had my prints out there at the job and I thought I had better get rid of them while I had a chance." An automobile was found which appellant admitted he had been using for several days before the burglary with one Bob Herron, and in it was found a piece of steel the end of which fitted into an impression made on the safe where the door had been pried open. White powder was found on the end of the steel tool and also on the door of the safe.

[1] Hacker was called as a witness for appellant. He testified that he, Bob Herron, and a man named Blanke had committed the burglary and that appellant did not have any part in the crime. Shortly after his arrest and before the trial, Hacker confessed his guilt to officers of San Bernardino county, and the confession was taken down by a shorthand reporter. In it he stated that appellant, together with Robert Herron and the witness Hacker, went to the office of the Shell Oil Company of California together in the automobile we have mentioned; that Herron forced open the window and pushed the safe out the door of the office; and that the three of them loaded it into the automobile and took it to the place where it was found. It was then broken open and the money divided among Hacker, Herron, and appellant. Appellant complains of the use of this confession in impeaching Hacker. Hacker was produced as a witness for appellant, and respondent was entitled to impeach his testimony by the use of his contradictory statements. Section 2052, Code Civ. Proc. The statements made to the reporter and officers in the confession certainly tended to impeach Hacker's testimony that appellant was not present at the time of the burglary and did not participate in the commission of the crime. These statements were properly admitted in evidence.

[2] Appellant's defense consisted of an alibi. He claimed that he was at the home of his brother at the time the burglary was committed. This defense was supported by the testimony of the brother, Pat Goodwin. In cross-examination of this witness the district attorney sought to impeach him by asking if he had ever been convicted of a felony, to which question Pat Goodwin answered that he had not. The district attorney then asked the witness if it were not true that on or about the 18th day of September, 1923, in Los Angeles, Cal., he had been convicted of the crime of grand larceny and sentenced to serve a term of imprisonment at the Preston School of Industry at Ione, to which the witness replied that it was true. After the answer to the question had been given, counsel for appellant, without moving to strike it out for the purpose of objection, objected to the question as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, for the reason that a sentence to Ione would not be a felony and therefore that the question was not proper for impeachment. The last ruling of the appellate court that we have been able to find upon the propriety of a question of this nature is found in the case of People v. Maloney, 92 Cal. App. 371, 268 P. 472, in which the court held as follows: "The defendant was sworn as a witness, and on cross-examination was asked whether or not he had been convicted of a felony, to which he replied in the negative. Thereupon the court received in evidence what counsel for defendant terms 'a certified copy of action No. 29736, in which the defendant was sentenced to Ione.' The document was in fact a certified copy of the commitment of the defendant to the Preston School of Industry, in which it is recited that defendant had 'pleaded guilty in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles, of an offense of violating section 146, California Vehicle Act, a felony, as charged in the information.' Defendant now contends that the court erred in admitting this document in evidence. The Attorney General has filed a brief in which he concedes that error was committed, but asks this court to refuse a reversal on the ground that defendant was not prejudiced thereby. He insists that the evidence so conclusively established defendant's guilt that there has been no miscarriage of justice. In conceding error the Attorney General cites the cases of People v. Hoffman, 199 Cal. 155, 248 P. 504, and People v. Adams, 76 Cal. App. 178, 244 P. 106. The facts in those two cases were very different from the facts in the case at bar. In the Hoffman Case the record of the juvenile court was held to be erroneously admitted for the reason that the proceedings in that court are not penal in their character. In the Adams Case the error consisted in the admission of evidence showing that defendant had been committed to the Whittier Industrial School at the age of 13 years. In neither case could it be said that defendant had been convicted of a felony. The commitment which was admitted in evidence in the case now before us did not issue in a proceeding in the juvenile court. Defendant had pleaded guilty to a violation of section 146 of the Motor Vehicle Act. In this section certain acts are described followed by the statement that any one guilty thereof 'shall be deemed guilty of a felony.' In People v. Ward, 134 Cal. 301, 66 P. 372, a witness was asked upon cross-examination whether he had been convicted of a felony. It was shown that the witness had been found guilty by a verdict of the jury, but had not been sentenced. The court said: 'It is contended that at the time the witness testified he had not been "convicted of a felony"; that to sustain the ruling of the court, it must be assumed, as a matter of law, that the verdict of guilty constituted a "conviction." That such verdict does constitute a conviction within the ordinary as well as the technical meaning of the word, seems to be well settled.' People v. Kepford, 52 Cal. App. 508, 199 P. 64. Section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a witness may be impeached by 'the record of the judgment, that he had been convicted of a felony.' In accordance with this section, the proper procedure would have been for the district attorney to present the judgment itself rather than the commitment wherein the plea of guilty is set forth. We think, however, that the criticism is only technical and that the defendant was not prejudiced by the admission in evidence of the commitment."

In view of this decision we hold that the question and answer was not prejudicial to the defendant. The rule announced in the foregoing case gains added force here, since it appears from the transcript that the evidence of appellant's guilt was conclusive and permitted no doubt of the correctness of the verdict.

Judgment affirmed.

SECONDO v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR MONTEREY COUNTY et al.

Civ. 7205.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

April 11, 1930.

1. Partnership ⇨322 — Grantee of partner's interest — Necessary party to accounting.

If interlocutory divorce decree giving wife husband's interest in partnership realty had become final, wife would have been necessary party to accounting (Code Civ. Proc. § 389).

2. Judgment ⇨564(1) — Admissibility — Necessity of final judgment.

Judgment, to be admissible in evidence to prove facts therein recited, must be final judgment.

3. Judgment ⇨564(1) — Action still pending — Finality of judgment.

If action in which judgment has been rendered is still pending, judgment is not final.

4. Judgment ⇨580 — "Pending."

Action is "pending" until finally determined on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 1049).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Pending," see Words and Phrases.]

5. Judgment ⇨580 — "Final judgment."

Although judgment may be final and hence subject to appeal, it is not necessarily final regarding property or rights affected, if subject to reversal; "final judgment."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Final Decree or Judgment," see Words and Phrases.]

6. Husband and wife ⇨270(5) — Actions involving community property — Necessary parties.

In actions involving community property to which husband is party, wife's interest is represented; hence she is not necessary party.

7. Mandamus ⇨3(3) — Partnership accounting against husband — Intervention by wife — Adequate remedy.

Wife awarded husband's interest in partnership realty by interlocutory divorce decree had adequate remedy by intervening in partners' action against husband for dissolution and accounting as regards right to writ of mandate to be made party to such action (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 389, 1086).

The wife had applied for writ of mandate directing the superior court to make her a party defendant in an action against the husband for partnership accounting, claiming to be entitled to husband's share of partnership realty by terms of interlocutory decree of divorce.

Application by Katherine Secondo for writ of mandate to the Superior Court, Hon. H. G. Jorgenson, Judge, to compel respondent judge to enter an order making petitioner a party defendant in a certain action.

Writ denied, and proceeding dismissed.

J. A. Bardin, of Salinas, and Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

An application for a writ of mandate, requiring the superior court of Monterey county and the judge thereof to enter an order making petitioner a party defendant to an action pending therein numbered 11514 and entitled "Joseph Secondo and Pete Secondo, plaintiffs, versus Mitchell Secondo, defendant." An alternative writ having issued, the matter was submitted upon the demurrer and answer of the defendants.

The following are the facts: The parties to the above action are copartners engaged in the business of farming and fruit packing. The action was brought on September 17, 1929, for a dissolution of the partnership and an accounting. The partnership was formed on January 15, 1925, and, in addition to certain personal property, the assets of the concern comprise three parcels of realty, the legal title to which appears in the name of one of the plaintiffs. Mitchell Secondo, the defendant, and Katherine Secondo, the petitioner herein, are husband and wife, and on September 4, 1929, in the superior court of Santa Cruz county, in an action for divorce instituted by petitioner, an interlocutory divorce was entered by which it was adjudged that all the right, title, and interest of Mitchell Secondo in the partnership real property be awarded and set aside to her. A motion for a new trial of the action was denied, and thereafter an appeal was taken from the judgment by Mitchell Secondo, and is now pending. On September 21, 1929, petitioner filed in the action between the partners a motion for an order that she be brought in and made a party thereto upon the ground that, the interest of her husband in the real property having been adjudged to be community property and awarded to her by the above decree, she had an interest in the subject-matter of the action, and was a necessary party thereto. The motion was denied, but the court by its order granted her leave to file therein a complaint in intervention.

[1-5] It has been held that a grantee of a partner's interest in partnership realty is a necessary party to an accounting (Cuyamaca Granite Co. v. Pacific Paving Co., 95 Cal. 252, 30 P. 525; Doudell v. Shoo, 20 Cal. App. 424, 443, 129 P. 478); and, had the decree become final, an order that petitioner be made a party to the action would have been proper. This, however, was not the case; and the rule is well settled that a judgment, in order to be admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving facts therein recited, must be a final judgment in the cause; and, if the action in which the same is rendered is still pending, the judgment is not final (In re Blythe, 99 Cal. 472, 475, 34 P. 108; Chambers v. Farnham, 39 Cal. App. 17, 21, 179 P. 423); and an action is deemed to be pending until its final determination on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 1049). Furthermore, though a judgment may be final with reference to the court which pronounced it, and as such be the subject of appeal, yet it is not necessarily final with reference to the property or rights affected so long as it is subject to appeal and liable to be reversed. Cook v. Ceas, 143 Cal. 221, 227, 77 P. 65; Hills v. Sherwood, 33 Cal. 474.

In so far as petitioner's claim to an interest in the property depended upon the judgment, her motion was properly denied. She contends, however, that, having alleged in her affidavit filed in support of the motion that she had a community interest in the property, and the allegation not having been denied by the partners, and they in effect having admitted in their complaint that she had such interest, she was by reason thereof a necessary party to the action.

[6, 7] Such is not the rule. As to her community interest, the wife is in privity with her husband, who, in actions involving the property, fully represents both their interests, and she is not a necessary party thereto. Cutting v. Bryan [Cal. Sup.] 274 P. 326; 31 Cor. Jur., Husband and Wife, § 1270, p. 160. Under the facts presented, petitioner was not a necessary party to the action, and it was consequently not the duty of respondent court to grant the motion. Should the interlocutory decree be affirmed, an order that petitioner be made a party will no doubt be entered as required by statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 389; Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 1, 84 P. 145, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275; Solomon v. Redona, 52 Cal. App. 300, 198 P. 643); but until then, so far as shown, intervention will furnish a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy (Code Civ. Proc. § 1086) for the protection of her community interest.

The petition is denied, and the proceeding dismissed.

BUNNELL v. BAKER.★
Civ. 128.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

March 31, 1930.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 28, 1930.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

On rehearing.

For former opinion, see 285 P. 877.

Beecher S. Stowe, Ben S. Hunter, and L. E. Dadmun, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.
A. Heber Winder, of Riverside, and John J. Craig, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The last sentence of the opinion in this case, rendered by this court on March 4, 1930 (285 P. 877), as follows: "We would not disturb this portion of the judgment were the record free from the errors we have pointed out," is stricken out and the following is inserted in its place and stead: "We would not disturb this portion of the judgment were the record free from other errors." As hereby modified and amended, said opinion correctly states the conclusions of this court is adopted as such.

In his petition for rehearing the respondent offers, for the first time, to have the judgment for the value of the trucks reduced in the sum of $3,200.42, and, upon such reduction being made, requests that the judgment be affirmed. In our opinion we did not find it necessary to consider or comment upon the amount awarded by the jury as damages sustained by the defendant by being deprived of the possession of the personal property for three hundred days. The jury fixed the value of the property at $10,000, and the damages for its detention at $15,000. If this amount is not excessive, it is dangerously near being so. We do not think it necessary to decide this question, but we believe the case should be tried anew. There are other very questionable parts of the record that it is not necessary to pass upon here.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

105 Cal. App. 23

NEILSON v. WALKER et al.*
Civ. 6976.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 1, 1930.

Rehearing Denied May 1, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 29, 1930.

1. Automobiles ⇨226(2) — Collision — Failure to light bicycle — Contributory negligence.

Noncompliance with statute in failing to equip bicycle with lights, if contributing proximately to collision between bicycle and automobile, was negligence preventing recovery (Motor Vehicle Act, §§ 99, 105).

Motor Vehicle Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5128), §§ 99, 105, provide that all vehicles must be equipped with lights, and that all bicycles shall be equipped with lamps normally visible for at least 300 feet. The evidence showed, however, that collision occurred at brightly lighted intersection, and that bicycle, though without lamp, was visible for distance of almost 300 feet, and that driver of automobile, although he failed to see bicycle until only a few feet away, was not exercising due care.

2. Negligence ⇨136(26) — Contributory negligence — Jury question.

Contributory negligence is ordinarily question for jury.

3. Appeal and error ⇨999(3) — Contributory negligence — Conclusiveness of verdict.

Verdict adverse to defense of contributory negligence is conclusive, unless validity of defense showing negligence contributing proximately to injury follows necessarily from undisputed facts.

4. Automobiles ⇨245(78, 82) — Collision between bicycle and automobile — Contributory negligence — Jury question.

Absence of lamp, and speed of plaintiff's bicycle, which collided with defendant's automobile at brightly lighted intersection, on issue of contributory negligence, were jury questions.

5. Trial ⇨194(16) — Instructions — Charge on facts — Reckless conduct.

Instruction that driver's failure through carelessness to discover presence of another did not excuse reckless conduct held not charge on facts.

The instruction told jury that, if operator of vehicle should, in exercise of ordinary care, have become aware of another's presence in time to avoid collision, failure to discover the other is no excuse for conduct which would have amounted to recklessness, if he had known of presence of other person.

6. Trial ⇨250 — Irrelevant instruction — Absence of evidence — Error.

It is improper to give instruction which, although abstractly correct, is irrelevant or is unsupported by evidence.

7. Appeal and error ⇨1066 — Irrelevant instruction — Reversal.

Error in giving irrelevant or evidentially unjustified instruction does not warrant reversal, unless miscarriage of justice can reasonably be said to have resulted.

8. Infants ⇨115 — Appointment of guardian — Appeal on judgment roll — Necessity of record.

Proceedings relative to appointment of guardian ad litem, not being embodied in any record, could not be considered on appeal upon judgment roll (Code Civ. Proc. § 670).

9. Infants ⇨115 — Validity of proceedings and judgment — Presumption.

In appeal upon judgment roll in action against minor, it not appearing whether necessary guardian had been appointed, presumption was in favor of proceedings below (Code Civ. Proc. § 372).

Code Civ. Proc. § 372 requires that infant party must be represented either by general guardian or by guardian ad litem appointed by court in which action is pending.

10. Infants ⇨87 — Action against minor — Failure to appoint guardian — Disaffirmance.

If guardian were not appointed under statute for minor defendant, minor has right of disaffirmance after attaining majority until barred by laches (Code Civ. Proc. § 372).

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Action by Douglas Neilson, a minor, by Walter Neilson, his guardian ad litem.

against Jack Walker and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco (A. Dal Thomson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Clark & Heafey, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

An action to recover damages for personal injuries to plaintiff, Douglas Neilson, a minor, which were alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant Jack Walker, who is also a minor. These parties will be hereinafter referred to as the plaintiff and defendant, respectively.

It was stipulated at the trial that P. J. Walker, who was joined as a defendant and is the father of Jack Walker, had prior to the accident signed the latter's application for an automobile operator's license.

The answer denied negligence on the part of defendant and pleaded the contributory negligence of the plaintiff.

A jury returned a verdict against both defendants, who have appealed from the judgment entered thereon.

As grounds for the appeal it is contended that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, and that the court erred in denying a motion for a nonsuit and in instructing the jury.

The injuries occurred at about 8 o'clock p. m. on January 20, 1928, while the plaintiff, a newspaper carrier, was proceeding on his bicycle in an easterly direction along Arroyo avenue in the city of Piedmont. This avenue runs approximately east and west. Two other streets, namely, Upper Grand avenue, and further east, Lower Grand avenue, running from south to north and from the southeast to the northeast, respectively, end at Arroyo avenue. There is a 14 per cent. easterly slope on the latter avenue between the other streets mentioned. The defendant with two others was driving a Star roadster automobile west on Arroyo avenue, and, according to certain of the testimony, his course was to the left of the center line of the street. Instead of passing to the right of the intersection of the center lines of Arroyo and Lower Grand avenues, and thence along the latter avenue, the evidence shows that he turned into Lower Grand avenue, keeping to the left of its intersection, and continued his course on the left of the center line of the street. There was evidence showing that the plaintiff, who was coasting down the slope mentioned, had entered the intersection of Arroyo and Lower Grand avenue and was crossing the center line of the latter street when the defendant started to make the turn described. Seeing the danger of an accident, the plaintiff, in an attempt to avoid it, swerved to his right, but a collision, which caused him to suffer serious injury, occurred at a point about 8 feet west of the easterly curb of Lower Grand avenue. The evidence also shows that plaintiff entered the intersection at a rate of speed of about 20 miles per hour, and, according to the testimony, the defendant was traveling at about the same rate. The night was dark, but clear, and the testimony indicates that due to the proximity of several electric lights the street and the scene of the accident were well lighted; and in this connection a witness, who was driving a car some distance behind the defendant, testified that when he reached the railroad which crosses Arroyo avenue nearly 300 feet east of the intersection mentioned he saw the plaintiff approaching. It is admitted that there was no light on the bicycle, and that its brake was not applied.

That the evidence supports the jury's implied finding of negligence on the part of the defendant is not disputed; but it is urged that the failure to equip the bicycle with a lighted lamp was a violation of sections 99 and 105 of the Motor Vehicle Act (Deering's Gen. Laws, 1923, part 1, pp. 1879, 1884, Act 5128) and proximately contributed to the accident.

[1-3] Plaintiff's failure to comply with the above sections of the Motor Vehicle Act, if it contributed proximately to the injury complained of, was negligence on his part which would prevent a recovery. Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368, 113 P. 663; Garns v. Halpern, 193 Cal. 193, 223 P. 545; Truitner v. Knight, 83 Cal. App. 655, 257 P. 447. Ordinarily the question is one for the jury (Smith v. Occidental, etc., S. S. Co., 99 Cal. 468, 34 P. 84), and their verdict thereon in favor of the plaintiff must be regarded as conclusive, unless, as was said in Schneider v. Market Street Railway Co., 134 Cal. 482, 66 P. 734, 737, "the validity of the defense, both as to the existence of the negligence, and its effect as contributing proximately to the injury, follows necessarily from the undisputed facts." Here it sufficiently appears that the defendant was driving recklessly; and while he testified that he did not see the plaintiff until within a few feet of him, the evidence supports the conclusion that the conditions as to visibility were such that had he used ordinary care he would have seen the approaching bicycle soon enough to have avoided the collision.

[4] The facts of the present case are not unlike those in La Count v. Pasarich (Cal. Sup.) 270 P. 210, where it appeared that a collision between a truck and a bicycle occurred at a street crossing which was so flooded with light as to make the rider of a bicycle visible to the truck driver and the absence of a light on the bicycle probably inconsequential, and the question of contributory negligence was held to be one for the jury.

Here, also, the circumstances were such that this question with that of the effect of the speed of the bicycle (Truitner v. Knight, supra) were properly submitted to the jury, and we cannot say that their findings are unsupported.

[5] The court gave the following instruction to the jury: "If the operator of a vehicle should in the exercise of ordinary care have become aware of the presence of another in time to have avoided colliding with him, then the fact that he failed to become aware of the presence of the other is no excuse for conduct which would have amounted to recklessness if he had known of the presence of such person." The defendant claims that the instruction charged upon a matter of fact.

[6, 7] As held in the following cases the instruction correctly stated the law and was not an invasion of the province of the jury: Rush v. Lagomarsino, 196 Cal. 308, 237 P. 1066; Meyers v. Bradford, 54 Cal. App. 157, 201 P. 471. While it is improper to give an instruction which, though correct as an abstract statement of the law, has no bearing upon the issues of the case (Ensign v. Southern Pacific Co., 193 Cal. 311, 223 P. 953), or is unsupported by evidence (Risdon v. Yates, 145 Cal. 210, 78 P. 641), nevertheless, a reversal is justified only in case a miscarriage of justice can reasonably be said to have resulted therefrom (Dillon v. Prudential Ins. Co., 75 Cal. App. 266, 242 P. 736; Marston v. Pickwick Stages, Inc., 78 Cal. App. 526, 248 P. 930).

[8-10] The complaint alleged the nonage of defendant Jack Walker, and the question whether he was represented in the action by a guardian has been raised for the first time on appeal. The Code requires that when an infant is a party he must be represented either by his general guardian or by a guardian ad litem appointed by the court in which the action is pending (Code Civ. Proc. § 372); and so far as appears from the record in the present case he was not so represented. The appeal, however, is upon the judgment roll, of which proceedings relating to the appointment of a guardian ad litem do not form a part (Code Civ. Proc. § 670), and such matters in order to be considered on appeal must be embodied in some record (2 Cal. Jur., Appeal and Error, § 259, p. 520). The presumption in such a case is in favor of the action of the court below (Batchelder v. Baker, 79 Cal. 266, 21 P. 754); but should the fact be as claimed, the minor defendant has the right of disaffirmance in an appropriate proceeding at any time until barred by laches after attaining his majority (Gouanillou v. Ind. Acc. Com., 184 Cal. 418, 193 P. 937).

We are satisfied from an examination of the record that the verdict was fairly sustained by the evidence, and no error is shown which warrants the conclusion that the same resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

JONES v. SUMMERS.
Civ. 5773.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
April 2, 1930.

1. Judgment ⇨925 — Foreign judgment — Suit.

Creditor could sue judgment debtor upon judgment entered in another state and brought into state (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 456, 1908, 1913).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, section 1913, and section 456 relate to enforcement of foreign judgments.

2. Judgment ⇨934(1) — Action on foreign judgment — Finality of judgment.

Limitations to sue on foreign judgment not appealed from ran from time judgment became final and not from time judgment was rendered (Code Civ. Proc. § 336, subd. 1).

Code Civ. Proc. § 336, subd. 1, provides that an action upon a judgment or decree must be brought within five years as to actions other than for recovery of real property.

3. Constitutional law ⇨23 — Amendment — Appeal from superior court — Effect on prior appeals.

Constitutional amendment limiting appeals from superior court to proceedings wherein it has original jurisdiction held not to affect prior appeals (Const. art. 6, § 4b [see St. 1927, p. 2389]).

4. Constitutional law ⇨191 — Appeal — Right to limit — Foreclosing right of appeal — Retroactive legislation.

Legislature may discontinue right of appeal by retroactive legislation, destroying appeals already perfected.

5. Appeal and error ⇨2 — Statute — Terminating appellate jurisdiction — Retroactive effect.

Unless act terminating appellate court's jurisdiction so declares, or implication is definite that it is retroactive affecting pending appeals, act is not so construed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Action by Ralph A. Jones against William Summers. A judgment for the de-defendant in the municipal court was reversed by the Superior Court, and the defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

John Barnes and E. L. Williams, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

F. H. Whitfield, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J.

On November 17, 1926, an action was commenced in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles upon a judgment for the sum of $500, entered in the state of Nevada. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant, from which the plaintiff appealed to the superior court of Los Angeles county, wherein said judgment was reversed, and this is an appeal by the defendant therefrom.

It is contended that since the original judgment was rendered in a foreign state, the cause of action did not arise in Los Angeles county, nor in this state, and in any event that it was barred by the provisions of subdivision 1, section 336, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] It is argued that since in the ordinary acceptance a case is a state of facts furnishing occasion for the exercise of jurisdiction, the cause of action did not arise in this state so as to confer jurisdiction upon the superior court, and is hence not a case arising in the city or county of Los Angeles, within the meaning of the statutes conferring concurrent jurisdiction upon the municipal court. The defendant appeared by demurrer in the courts below solely upon the grounds above mentioned, and at no time questioned the validity of the judgment upon which suit was instituted. The plaintiff alleged the rendition of judgment in Nevada, and that under the laws of that state the defendant had six months within which to appeal; that he had not appealed, and that said judgment was in full force and effect. Section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a judgment or final order in an action or proceeding before a court of this state is conclusive between the parties in respect to the matter directly adjudged. By section 1913 of the same Code, the Legislature has ordained that the effect of a judicial record of a sister state is the same in this state as in the state where it was made, except that it can only be enforced by an action or special proceeding. It is not necessary in pleading a judgment that the facts conferring jurisdiction be stated. Code Civ. Proc. § 456. It is too obvious to justify further discussion that a judgment of a sister state, brought into this state, gives rise to a cause of action if the judgment debtor be sued here.

[2] It is claimed that the judgment was rendered in Nevada on June 10, 1921, and that, although the statutes in that state permit an appeal at any time within six months after entry thereof, the statute of limitations barred the present action on June 10, 1926, for the reason that the action in this state may be commenced within five years. Appellant's contention is that, having taken no appeal, the judgment in Nevada was not stayed, but he offers no authority which even remotely suggests that an appeal might not have been perfected within that time, or that the statute of limitations commences to run during the period allowed for appeal. It has repeatedly been held that a cause of action upon a judgment does not accrue until the judgment becomes final, and that the statute of limitations does not commence running in such cases until the expiration of the time for appeal. Harrier v. Bassford, 145 Cal. 529, 78 P. 1038; Cook v. Ceas, 143 Cal. 221, 77 P. 65; Willard v. Dobbins, 191 Cal. 287, 216 P. 1008.

Although the question as to jurisdiction of this court over appeals from the superior court, after an appeal from the municipal court, where the appeal was taken after November 6, 1928, has, in other cases, been denied and the appeals dismissed, we are not here concerned with that situation. The appeal in this case was taken on May 18, 1927, and prior to the date upon which the statute depriving this court of such jurisdiction became effective. The facts in this regard are the same as in Harris v. Moore (Cal. App.) 283 P. 76, where it was held that the constitutional provision (Const. art. 6, § 4b [St. 1927, c. 77, p. 2389]) here involved was not intended to apply retroactively, and hence would not take from the appellate court jurisdiction of appeals perfected at the time the amendment became effective.

[3-5] We think that this amendment to the Constitution is clearly distinguishable from the provision of the Code which was passed upon in Pacific Gas Radiator Co. v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. App. 200, 232 P. 995, because the latter expressly commanded the dismissal of appeals not taken in accordance with its requirements. There can be no doubt that a statute or constitutional provision may contain such a mandate, and when the legislative intention is clearly expressed, even though hardship may result, appeals will be dismissed, because under such circumstances an appellate court has no jurisdiction to act. But, in the instant case, no express purpose is discernible, and following our decision in Harris v. Moore, supra, we hold that the constitutional amendment here under consideration was not intended to apply to appeals perfected before the amendment became effective. The following fundamental propositions are determinative of the question here presented. First, it is within the jurisdiction of the law-making power to cut off the right of appeal by retroactive legislation so as to destroy appeals perfected before the taking effect of such law. Second, to do this obviously works great hardship and apparent injustice upon those who may have waived other remedies allowed by law for the correction of possible errors. Third, therefore, unless the act itself clearly indicates an intention that it shall have a retroactive or retrospective effect, the rule of statutory construction that such statutes are not to be construed as intended to apply retroactively so as to affect pending appeals is fully recognized and well established by the decisions of this state. Fourth, it is well settled that, in order that such changes in the law as the termination of appellate jurisdiction may affect pending appeals, the amending law must either expressly so declare or an implication that such was the intention of the law-making power must be definite and clear.

That these principles are law in this state is declared in the following decisions: Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157, 51 P. 48, 49; Vanderbilt v. All Persons, 163 Cal. 507, 126 P. 158; San Francisco, etc., Rys. v. Superior Court, 172 Cal. 541, 157 P. 604, 606; East Bay Mun. Utility Dist. v. Garrison, 191 Cal. 680, 218 P. 43, 47; Montecito County Water Dist. v. Doulton, 193 Cal. 398, 224 P. 747, 749; State Comm., etc., v. Welch, 20 Cal. App. 624, 807, 129 P. 974, 977; Harris v. Moore, supra.

In Montecito County Water Dist. v. Doulton, supra, the opinion declares:

"The said amendment to the statute of 1913, adopted on May 11, 1923, does not purport, either by its express terms or by any reasonable implication, to be retroactive in its operation or effect, and it is a well-established principle of statutory construction that, while the Legislature has power to pass retroactive laws which do not impair the obligations of contracts or affect injuriously vested rights, it is equally true that statutes are not to be construed as intended to have a retroactive effect so as to affect pending proceedings, unless such intent is expressly declared or necessarily implied from the language of the enactment."

To the same effect is East Bay Mun. Utility Dist. v. Garrison, supra:

"There is nothing in the act itself to indicate that it was intended to have any such retroactive effect, and it is a well-settled principle of statutory construction that an act will not be construed to be retroactive in the absence of either an express declaration to that effect or a very clear implication that such was the intent of the Legislature."

In Pignaz v. Burnett, supra, the statute in question shortened the time for taking an appeal from one year to six months after entry of judgment in the trial court. After six months had elapsed, but before the expiration of one year subsequent to judgment, an appeal was taken. In passing upon a motion to dismiss, the Supreme Court said:

"If the amendment operated retrospectively, it cut off the right of appeal immediately upon the taking effect of the act, affording no opportunity whatever thereafter for the exercise of this privilege, and depriving this court, so far as the legislature can, of its jurisdiction in the cases upon which it would so operate."

It was concluded that no such intention should be imputed to the Legislature. We think both the logic and the rule announced in San Francisco, etc., Rys. v. Superior Court, supra, are in point and controlling in passing upon the instant matter. Section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure had been amended (St. 1915, p. 202) to provide that the power of the superior court to pass upon motions for new trials should expire within three months after verdict rendered. In the case giving rise to the application for mandate there being determined, verdict was rendered, and a motion for a new trial was made before the amendment became effective, but the date for hearing said motion was some time thereafter. The decision is so clearly in point that we quote from it at length:

"We are here dealing with a provision of law which deprives a court of power to pass on a motion for new trial unless such power is exercised within a specified time after verdict or notice of decision. The time is designated in clear and unequivocal terms, and, if the provision is applicable at all to proceedings pending at the time it became operative, its terms are such, in our opinion, as to preclude a construction to the effect that it did not absolutely take away from a trial court the power to pass on the motion for a new trial after the expiration of three months from the rendition of the verdict or service on the moving party of the notice of the decision of the court, regardless of all other circumstances.

"This being the construction that must be given to the provision, we have no doubt that it should not be construed as applicable to proceedings on motion for new trial pending at the time it became operative. Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157, 51 P. 48, is practically controlling as to this. We have already substantially stated the question decided in that case. There was involved the question of the application of a statute shortening the time within which an appeal might be taken from a judgment from one year to six months to judgments entered prior to the taking effect of the statute. The statute contained no saving clause as to judgments entered prior to such time. Holding that, if this statute were to be construed as applicable to such judgments, the effect would be to absolutely cut off at the very instant it went into effect the right of appeal from any judgment entered six months or more previously, the court said: 'Unless it is absolutely necessary, we should not impute such an intention to the Legislature. In view of the construction which has almost invariably been given to statutes of this character, I feel sure that the Legislature intended that its operation should be limited to judgments thereafter entered.' In the case of the provision here involved, if the same be held applicable to proceedings on motion for new trial pending at the time it took effect, the result would be to absolutely cut off at that moment the right of the party to have the determination of the trial court on his motion regularly instituted and prosecuted in all cases where the verdict was rendered or notice of the decision given three months or more before the provision became a law. As said in Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157, 51 P. 48, 'no such intention should be imputed to the Legislature unless absolutely necessary.' Under the circumstances we are satisfied that it must be held that the operation of the provision in question was intended to be limited to proceedings on motion for new trial initiated after the change in the law. Especially is this true in view of the decision of Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157, 51 P. 48, which, it is only fair to assume, was in the minds of those enacting the provision, and to them declared the rule by which their enactment would be construed by the courts."

Here, it is equally true that those enacting the amendment terminating the appellate jurisdiction of the District Court of Appeal in such cases must be assumed to have had in mind both the decision in Pignaz v. Burnett, and San Francisco, etc., Rys. v. Superior Court, supra, as well as other decisions of our appellate courts declaring similar principles. It is also true that, in this instance, if the amendment be given a retroactive construction and made applicable to appeals pending at the time it became effective, the result would be to "cut off at that moment" the right of a party to have the determination of his appeal or the asserted errors of the trial court reviewed at all, in those cases wherein the time for appeal expired.

We have not overlooked the opinions rendered in Berg v. Traeger (Cal. App.) 285 P. 332, and D. Q. Service Corp. v. Securities Loan & Discount Co. (Cal. App.) 285 P. 335. Unlike these decisions, we hold that in this instance it is not only unnecessary and unfair to construe the amendment here in question as being retroactive, but that to do so would be inconsistent with the authorities to which we have referred and from which we have quoted. The California decisions referred to in the last-named cases do not, in our opinion, require the conclusion that this amendment should be interpreted retroactively. In Johnston v. Wolf (Cal. Sup.) 274 P. 1028, the appeal was taken after November 6, 1928, the date upon which the amendment took effect. This fact alone is sufficient to distinguish it from the instant proceeding. In People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 159 Cal. 65, 112 P. 866, 872, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1148, English authorities and those from other jurisdictions than California, in this country, are reviewed, which recognize it to be a general rule that the repeal of a statute operates upon pending proceedings and terminates them so that they at once abate upon the taking effect of the repealing statute. However, what is there said is obiter dictum. In that behalf, what is said in the same opinion is peculiarly applicable: "Here the wise admonition of Chief Justice Marshall in Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 399, 5 L. Ed. 257, applies with peculiar force: 'It is a maxim not to be disregarded that general expressions in every opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. If they go beyond the case, they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit, when the very point is presented for decision.' " And so the discussion upon the point here under consideration has no application to control the decision in the instant appeal, because that case went off on the proposition that there had been a judgment which had become final before the repealing statute became effective, and, although a motion for new trial was pending, and an appeal had been taken from an order denying it (as it could be under the law then in force), it was held that under those circumstances the repeal of the statute in question did not destroy the judgment nor necessitate a dismissal of the action. It is plain that what is said in the opinion as to the general effect of the repeal of a law, which has been the foundation for a cause of action, as determined by a judgment which has not become final, is beside the subject, and unnecessary to decision of the case. It is undoubted that there is respectable authority elsewhere holding the various "extremes of judicial determination" mentioned in the opinion, but the question here under consideration is one which appears to be beyond the doubtful stage in this state. Authorities in conflict with our own decisions are not persuasive, nor is the obiter dictum in People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo controlling, no matter how scholarly and extended it may be, when opposed to square and direct rulings in other and more recent decisions. We have heretofore distinguished Pacific Gas Radiator Co. v. Superior Court, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

BACH et al. v. C. SWANSTON & SON et al.
Civ. 3939.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

April 3, 1930.

1. Death §104(1) — Instruction — Liability — Injuries to deceased.

Instruction held not erroneous as stating defendants would be liable for damages to plaintiff's wife dying from injuries sustained in automobile collision.

The instruction stated that violation of provision of law, intended for the guidance of and prescribing duties of persons in use of public highway, is of itself negligence, and if negligence proximately causes injury to another who is without fault, the one so guilty of negligence is liable to one injured for all damage proximately caused to injured party.

2. Automobiles §246(23) — Instructions — Recovery for death — Injury — Collision — Contributory negligence.

Instructions held not erroneous, as allowing recovery for death of wife and for injury husband sustained in automobile collision, irrespective of contributory negligence.

Instructions stated driver of automobile, colliding with plaintiff's car, was bound to use reasonable care to anticipate the presence on avenue of other persons having equal rights with himself to be there, and failure on his part to use reasonable care would be negligence, and that every person who suffers detriment from unlawful act or omission of another may recover compensation from the person in fault.

3. Trial §253(1) — Instructions — Ignoring defenses.

If instruction purports to state conditions necessary to verdict, it must state all conditions and not overlook pleaded defenses supported by substantial evidence.

4. Damages §216(6) — Instruction — Personal injuries — Permanency.

Instruction that jury may consider whether injuries to plaintiff, suing for injuries sustained in automobile collision, are permanent, held not erroneous under evidence.

5. Evidence §570 — Expert testimony — Conclusiveness.

Jury is not concluded by expert testimony.

6. Trial §260(1) — Instructions — Covered requests — Refusal.

Refusing instructions covered by instructions given held not error.

7. Trial §133(6) — Remarks of counsel — Insurance — Cure of error.

Remark by attorney for plaintiff, injured in automobile collision, in referring to person as insurance adjuster, did not require reversal where court instructed jury to disregard, evidence preponderated in plaintiff's favor and inference was not clear that purpose was to show jury defendants were insured.

8. Appeal and error §1004(3) — Review — Amount of recovery — Approval.

Decision of trial court and jury cannot be set aside because damages are excessive unless verdict suggests at first blush passion, prejudice, or corruption of jury.

9. Death §99(4) — Personal injuries — Excessiveness of verdict.

$30,000 for death of forty-year old wife, and mother of four children under twelve years old, held not excessive.

10. Damages §132(6) — Personal injuries — Excessiveness of verdict.

$6,000 for fracture of clavicle and hip bone of thirty-eight year old automobile mechanic, necessitating hospital treatment, held not excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Lester A. Bach and others, by John Bach, their guardian ad litem, and by John Bach, individually, against C. Swanston & Son, a corporation, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Len H. Honey, of Stockton, and Butler, Van Dyke, Desmond & Harris, of Sacramento, for appellants.

V. L. Hatfield, W. H. Hatfield, and Martin I. Welsh, all of Sacramento, for respondents.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment for damages in favor of respondents growing out of an automobile collision that resulted in the death of Mary Bach, the mother of respondent minors and wife of respondent John Bach, and that resulted in alleged injuries to the said John Bach.

The complaint contains two counts, the first of which is for damages for the death of the said Mary Bach, and the second being for damages for the alleged injuries sustained by the said John Bach. This case was tried with a jury which returned a verdict for damages for the death of Mary Bach in the sum of $30,000, and a verdict in favor of the said John Bach, for damages for the alleged injuries sustained by him, in the sum of $6,000.

On the morning that the accident happened the said John Bach was driving his Chevrolet automobile north on Fourteenth avenue in the city of Sacramento. With him in said automobile was his wife, Mary Bach, who was sitting in the back seat, and a Mr. Benson, who was sitting in the front seat to the right of the said John Bach.

Respondents' evidence was to the effect that when John Bach reached the intersection of said Fourteenth avenue and Forty-Fourth street appellant Charles Swanston was about 100 feet east of said intersection proceeding west on said Forty-Fourth street, and was operating a two and a half ton Reo truck loaded with meat; that said John Bach proceeded to cross the said intersection in a northerly direction at a speed of not exceeding ten miles per hour; that he had almost passed out of this intersection when his automobile was struck by the truck driven by the said Charles Swanston, who was traveling at the time of the impact at a high rate of speed, somewhere in the neighborhood of forty to forty-five miles per hour. As a result of the collision Mary Bach and John Bach were hurled from their automobile. Mary Bach sustained injuries from which she shortly thereafter died, and John Bach received injuries that necessitated his treatment at a hospital.

Respondents allege in their complaint that the said collision and resultant death of Mary Bach and injury to John Bach were caused by the negligence of appellant Charles Swanston.

In their answer appellants deny the said negligence and allege that the said John Bach was guilty of contributory negligence that directly and proximately contributed to the said death and injury.

There is ample evidence to support the verdicts of the jury that the said collision and resultant death and injury were caused by the negligence of appellant Charles Swanston and that the said John Bach was not guilty of any negligence that contributed thereto, and this appellants concede.

It was stipulated by appellants that, at the time of said collision, appellant Charles Swanston was driving the said truck as an employee of appellant C. Swanston & Son Company and at that time was acting in the course of his employment as such; that he was a minor and that he had an operator's license, the application for it having been signed by appellants Robert Swanston and Florence Swanston.

[1] Appellants claim that the court erred in some of the instructions that were given to the jury; that it erroneously instructed the jury that appellants would be liable for the injury or pecuniary damage to deceased. Appellants predicate the alleged error upon the language contained in the instruction which reads as follows: "A violation of a provision of law intended for the guidance of and prescribing the duties of persons in the use of a public highway, is of itself negligence, and if such negligence proximately causes injury to another who is himself without fault; the one so guilty of such negligence is liable to the one so injured for all of the damage proximately caused to such injured party."

Appellants argue that this instruction could be interpreted by the jury in but one way, that is to say, that the cause of action in favor of Mary Bach, as "one so injured" survived and was enforceable in this action. The construction placed upon this instruction by appellants is certainly a strained one. There is no cause of action here in favor of Mary Bach. So far as the death of Mary Bach is concerned, the injured persons are her husband and children. Then again the court very fully instructed the jury that respondents are not entitled to recover for any detriment sustained by the deceased prior to her death; that the jury was not to consider the question as to whether or not she suffered any pain prior to her death; that this action does not represent any right of action which she would have had had she survived her injuries; that respondents, if they can recover at all, can only recover for the pecuniary loss sustained by them, if any there be, on account of the death of deceased. There was no error committed in giving this instruction.

[2] Appellants next contend that the court erroneously instructed the jury that respondents were entitled to recover irrespective of the defense of contributory negligence. An examination of the court's instructions shows that there is no substantial foundation for this alleged error. The particular instructions to which appellants call attention as substantiating this alleged error are as follows:

"The defendant, Charles Swanston, was bound to use reasonable care to anticipate the presence on Fourteenth avenue of other persons having equal rights with himself to be there, and a failure on his part to use such reasonable care would be negligence."

"Every person who suffers detriment from the unlawful act or omission of another may recover from the person in fault a compensation therefor in money, which is called damages."

[3] Appellants claim that these last-quoted instructions ignored the question of contributory negligence and in effect direct a verdict for respondents in case the jury found that appellants were guilty of negligence. In support of this contention they cite Beyerle v. Clift, 59 Cal. App. 7, 209 P. 1015, and other cases, to the effect that if an instruction by its terms purports to state the conditions necessary to a verdict, it must state all of the conditions and must not overlook pleaded defenses on which substantial evidence has been introduced. This undoubtedly is the law, but these cases are not in point as applied to the last-mentioned instructions, for the reason that these instructions did not purport to state the conditions necessary to a verdict, nor in any way direct a verdict.

In the case of Douglas v. Southern Pacific Co., 203 Cal. 390, 264 P. 237, where the question of contributory negligence was an issue, the court instructed the jury that if it found that the injury and death were caused by the negligence of employees while operating defendant's engine, at the time of the accident, the verdict should be for plaintiffs, since an employer is bound by the acts of his employees within the scope of their employment, and their negligence is, in law, deemed to be the employer's negligence. In commenting upon this instruction, Waste, C. J., delivering the opinion, said, in substance, that the authorities are legion that the so-called "formula" instruction must contain all the elements essential to a recovery, and the absence of any one of such elements may not be compensated for nor cured by a reference thereto in other instructions correctly and fully stating the law. However, this instruction did not purport to be a complete statement of the law upon which plaintiffs might recover, but served merely to inform the jury that responsibility attaches to a principal for the negligent acts of his servants committed within the scope of the latter's employment. The instruction constituted nothing more, in the opinion of the court, than an expression of the doctrine of respondeat superior, and, this being so, need not set forth all the elements essential to a recovery by plaintiffs. The court further said that these several elements were fully and properly expressed to the jury in the many other instructions given by the court. To the same effect is Peak v. Key System Transit Co., 88 Cal. App. 354, 263 P. 578, 582, wherein the court, in passing upon an instruction similar to those quoted in the instant case, said: "The scope of the instruction embraced only the substantive law of primary liability without reference to any defenses."

Furthermore, in the case now before the court, the jury were very fully and clearly instructed upon the law of contributory negligence, together with the effect it would have upon the right of respondents to recover, and in that connection the court instructed the jury that if respondent John Bach was guilty of negligence in the slightest degree that contributed to the said death of Mary Bach and injury to John Bach, respondents could not recover.

[4] The next alleged error of the court complained of by appellants is that the trial court erroneously instructed the jury it could award damages to John Bach for alleged permanent injury suffered by him from said collision. The portion of the instruction of which appellants complain is as follows: "You may consider whether or not the injury to the plaintiff, John Bach, is permanent in character."

The date of the accident was August 14, 1928, and the date of the trial was June 25, 1929. At the trial John Bach testified that at the time of the accident his occupation was that of an automobile mechanic, and that he was strong and healthy and could do all kinds of heavy work; that his injuries consisted of a fractured hip and broken shoulder, in consequence of which he could no longer do any hard work or heavy lifting; that his hearing is affected and he is nervous and has dizzy spells; that he did not have the use of his shoulder; that two of his fingers are numb, and that he does not sleep well. The only expert who testified in the case was Doctor Von Geldern. Appellants maintain that the testimony of this witness conclusively established the fact that the effect of the said injuries received by respondent John Bach were not of a permanent character. Upon direct examination, after testifying that he found a fracture of the left clavicle and a fracture of the hip bone, he stated that he believed the injuries would clear up and not leave permanent disability. Upon cross-examination he testified that the clavicle and hip were entirely healed and that he could see no reason why there should be any disability in either. Further testifying regarding the hip fracture he was asked: "Q. So, at the time, after the time it required the fracture to heal, this man would be all right, is that it? A. Yes; that is just one point might be here, there, you can see on either side there is some depression (referring to X-ray plates). In other words, the joint from this muscle region is affected in some places, that is true. Now whether that change in position of the muscle will make any difference, I do not know—in the strength." But he further testified that in the course of a year or so, after healing it would then get in position and function in a fairly normal way and that there was no reason why it should create any weakness. On redirect examination he was asked the following question: "Q. Might there be a consequence attached to the changed muscles that you could not estimate?" To which he replied: "A. That is possible. But a fracture of this sort does not leave any permanent injury. That there may be, I would not say in any individual case there will not be some disturbance—on the other hand, the patient may have subjective symptoms that could not be brought out by examination."

We think there is evidence from which the jury might draw the inference that the effect of the injury was of a continuing and permanent nature. The expert does not positively state that disturbances growing out of the injuries sustained by respondent John Bach will not continue. On the contrary, he says that the changed muscle he found upon examination of respondent John Bach's hip may have subjective symptoms that could not be brought out by examination.

[5] The jury are not concluded by the testimony of the expert. May v. Farrell, 94 Cal. App. 703, 271 P. 789. Expert testimony is to be given the weight to which it appears to be entitled. The law makes no distinction between that kind of testimony and evidence of other character. State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 195 Cal. 174, 231 P. 996.

[6] Appellants offered an instruction to the effect that passion, prejudice, and sympathy should not enter into the consideration of the case by the jury. The court refused to give this instruction on the ground that the matters contained therein were covered by other instructions that were given. We are of the opinion that these matters were sufficiently placed before the jury in other instructions given by the court.

[7] During the cross-examination of H. Moradian, a witness produced by respondents, who testified that he witnessed the said collision, he was asked, for the purpose of impeachment, if he had not made certain statements to Mr. Desmond, one of appellants' attorneys, and another man who was pointed out in the courtroom, but whose name was not given, contradictory to the facts testified to by witness while on the stand. At this stage of the proceedings, Mr. Welsh, who was one of respondents' attorneys, evidently with the view of establishing the identity of the man referred to and pointed out, remarked, "That was the insurance adjuster." Thereupon attorney for appellants assigned the remark as prejudicial misconduct upon the part of respondents' attorney, and moved for the discharge of the jury. The court denied the motion and admonished the jury to disregard the remarks of the attorney, with instruction to decide the case exclusively on the evidence and the instructions of the court. Later on, in presenting their evidence, appellants placed W. B. Winters, presumably the man pointed out, on the stand for the purpose of impeaching the said Moradian, and upon direct examination Winters testified that he was an adjuster, employed by the Union Automobile Insurance Company, and as such investigated the said accident, and interviewed the said Moradian in relation to same. Appellants claim that the said remarks of respondents' attorney were of such prejudicial nature as to require a reversal of the judgment in this case.

There is abundant authority to the effect that efforts of plaintiff's counsel to get before the jury the facts that defendant is insured against loss is prejudicial and where the evidence is closely balanced, justifies a reversal. However, in this case we do not feel that such a drastic result should follow, first, because the inference is not clear that the purpose in making said remarks was to get before the jury the fact that appellants were insured or that the jury so interpreted the said remarks, next, because the court promptly instructed the jury to disregard them, and, lastly, because the evidence in this case, upon the issues involved, is by no means equally balanced, but, on the contrary, largely preponderates in favor of respondents.

Appellants vigorously maintain that each of the verdicts is excessive. At the date of the accident Mary Bach was forty years of age, with an expectancy of life of 28.18 years. She was in good health, did all of her housework, washing, ironing, mending, and sewing for her family, was an affectionate and loving wife and mother, was attentive to her children, devoting herself to their moral and educational training and made a harmonious home for them and her husband. Respondent John Bach was thirty-eight years of age at the date of the accident, and the ages of the four children ranged from five to twelve years. In the case of Redfield v. Oakland C. S. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 277, 42 P. 822, 823, 1063, which was tried in 1895, and which was an action for damages prosecuted by the husband and minor children for the death of the wife and mother, the court held that a verdict for $14,000 was not excessive. In that case the court said: "It is true that in all such cases it is difficult to fix the definite money value of the services of such a wife and mother. Precise accuracy in that regard is not capable of being attained either by a court or jury."

In the case of Valente v. Sierra Railway Co., 158 Cal. 412, 111 P. 95, 98, tried in 1910, and which was also an action by the husband and minor children for damages for the death of the wife and mother, the court held that a verdict of $14,000 was not at all excessive, and in the course of the opinion delivered in that case said: "Manifestly there can be no fixed standard by which that loss can be determined. Necessarily the law had committed its ascertainment to the discretion and sound judgment of the jury, and it cannot be said that for the loss of a devoted wife and mother and deprivation by the husband and minor children of the advantages and benefits which, from the evidence in this case, the jury were warranted in finding she would continue to bestow on them had she lived, that the verdict rendered by the jury is at all excessive."

In the case of Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. R. Co., 171 Cal. 401, 153 P. 712, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 408, tried in 1915, the court held that a verdict for $18,000 in favor of the husband and children for the death of the wife and mother was not excessive. In the recent case of O'Meara v. Haiden, 204 Cal. 354, 268 P. 334, 60 A. L. R. 1381, in which the question of excessive damages was before the Supreme Court, Curtis, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said that the courts approved of verdicts today which would have been unhesitatingly set aside ten or fifteen years ago, and ascribes this change to the fact that, measured in money, the earning capacity of most men has increased, and that, measured by its purchasing power, the value of the dollar has decreased; that the courts of this state must, as the courts in other jurisdictions have done, in passing upon this question, take judicial notice of the fact that the value of the dollar has materially changed from what it was some ten or fifteen years ago; that a given sum when measured by its purchasing power is far less than it formerly was.

Regarding the injuries claimed to have been sustained by John Bach as a result of said accident it appears from the evidence that he was thrown from his automobile and rendered unconscious, and so remained for several hours; that he was taken to a hospital and was confined there by his injuries for a month; that prior to the accident he was a strong, robust man, was an automobile mechanic doing and capable of doing all kinds of heavy work; that as a result of the accident his left clavicle and his hip bone were fractured; that he suffered a good deal of pain from the injuries and up to the date of the trial, which occurred nearly a year after the accident, had not recovered from the injuries; that he cannot do any heavy lifting; that if attempted it makes his head weak, has dizzy spells, has affected his hearing; that his shoulder is not as good as it was before the accident, and two of his fingers are numb; that two months after the accident he returned to his work, but can perform only light work.

[8] In their motion for a new trial, appellants assigned, as one of their grounds for setting aside both verdicts, excessive damages, appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice, which motion was denied by the court.

It has been decided a number of times by the Supreme and Appellate Courts that upon appeal the decision of the trial court and jury cannot be set aside on the ground that the damages are excessive, unless the verdict is so outrageously excessive as to suggest at the first blush passion, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury. Lahti v. McMenamin, 204 Cal. 415, 268 P. 644; Reneau v. Hirsch, 88 Cal. App. 1, 262 P. 1100.

[9, 10] There is nothing in the record in this case indicating that the jury, in the rendition of the verdicts, was actuated or influenced by passion, prejudice, or corruption, or by anything other than its best judgment and the honest conviction of the individual jurors. Under these conditions we do not feel that the amounts of the verdicts are such as would justify this court in reversing the judgment or require that it should so do.

In addition to the other errors which appellants contend that trial court committed in the course of the trial, they claim that it instructed the jury on matters of fact. We deem it unnecessary to discuss this alleged error further than to say that it is without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

MARKS, J.

On November 10, 1926, Walter L. Clapham, the legal owner of a Chrysler sedan, sold it to F. W. Stockdale under a conditional sales contract, which reserved the title in the seller, and provided, among other things, that should the buyer fail or neglect to comply with the terms of the contract, or fail to make the deferred payments according to the terms thereof, the seller might exercise his option of declaring the unpaid portion of the purchase price due and payable, and bring suit therefor, or might, without notice, declare the buyer's rights under the contract terminated and immediately repossess the car. The buyer defaulted in his payment falling due on February 10, 1927, and on all payments thereafter, leaving an unpaid balance of the purchase price due respondent in the sum of $1,201.60, no part of which was paid by the buyer or his assignees. On November 24, 1926, Walter L. Clapham, for a valuable consideration, assigned the conditional sales contract to respondent, together with the legal title to the car. On March 3, 1927, Stockdale assigned his interest in the automobile to James Hollis. On May 2, 1927, both Stockdale and Hollis assigned their interests in the car to appellants, who were attorneys for Stockdale and who had notice of the conditional sales contract and the default in the payments. Hollis also had the same notice. On April 5, 1927, respondent took possession of the car and retained the same. Appellants did not have either actual or constructive possession of the car and did not receive the certificate of its registration. The other facts brought out at the trial are not necessary to a decision of this appeal.

[1] Title 3 of the California Vehicle Act, in effect at the time of the transaction under consideration (St. 1923, p. 517, as amended; St. 1925, p. 402), provides for the registration of motor vehicles and the transfer of title thereof. It is therein provided that until the motor vehicle division has registered a change of ownership and issued a certificate of registration and a certificate of ownership to the owner, or legal owner entitled thereto, the "delivery of such vehicle shall be deemed not to have been made and title thereto shall be deemed not to have passed and said intended transfer shall be deemed to be incomplete and not to be valid or effective for any purpose" (St. 1923, p. 524, § 45, as amended by St. 1925, p. 402, § 7).

The facts in the case of Samuels v. Barnet, 79 Cal. App. 529, 250 P. 405, are very similar to the one we are considering except that it arose under the Motor Vehicle Act of the state of California (St. 1919, p. 191). However, section 8 of the earlier act (St. 1915, p. 402), as amended by St. 1919, p. 199, § 7, contained provisions identical in substance to the California Vehicle Act controlling here. General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Dallas, 198 Cal. 365, 245 P. 184. In the case of Samuels v. Barnet, supra, the following was said: "The purported sale of the automobile to the appellant was effected while he and Bohlen occupied the fiduciary relation of attorney and client. From appellant's testimony in this case, it appears that a judgment for over $1,100 had just been rendered against his client, that the car was valued at $2,073.65 and was taken by appellant for a debt of $1,000 claimed to be owing him from Bohlen. It also appears that Bohlen was without any other assets with which to satisfy the judgment against him. The purported sale, not having been accompanied by an 'actual and continual change of possession,' was presumably fraudulent as to creditors of Bohlen (section 3440, Civ. Code), and the burden was on appellant to overcome this presumption. * * * The case is a simple one. The appellant bases his right of action on a purported transfer of a secondhand automobile, wherein he failed to meet the requirements of the statute. The section quoted provides that, unless these restrictions are followed, the 'intended transfer shall be deemed to be incomplete and not to be valid or effective for any purpose.' The Legislature could scarcely have used words which would have been more expressive of the intention to declare that such transfers should not be effective for any purpose. Such being the case, the transfer could not be effective for the purpose of conferring upon appellant the right of possession necessary for the maintenance of this action."

The cases of Parke v. Franciscus, 194 Cal. 284, 228 P. 435, and General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Dallas, supra, are to the same effect.

[2] Appellants brought this action to recover possession of the Chrysler sedan or the value thereof in case possession could not be had. It was incumbent upon them to prove their right of immediate possession of the car. This they failed to do under the provisions of section 3440, Civil Code, and of the California Vehicle Act which we have cited. Therefore the judgment of the trial court in favor of respondent was correct and is hereby affirmed.

I concur: BARNARD, Acting P. J.

STROTHER, Justice pro tem.

I dissent. The defendant held the legal title to the car, which had been sold under a conditional contract giving the seller his option, in case of default in making installment payments, either to declare the whole balance due and bring an action for its recovery, or to repossess the car.

Stockdale, the original contract purchaser, transferred possession of the car to one Hollis and assigned to him his interest in the contract of purchase. Thereafter, default having been made in several installment payments, the defendant here exercised its option under the contract and brought an action for the full amount of the balance of purchase price. After the action was brought, defendant made demand upon Hollis for possession of the car and he, having no knowledge that action had been brought, and not being then advised of it, turned the car over to this defendant.

Afterward Stockdale and Hollis each transferred whatever interest either had in the car to the plaintiffs here, who made demand upon the defendant for the car, which was refused.

It is conceded that, under the decisions in this state, when the legal owner of personal property, which is the subject of conditional sale by contract containing the terms above set forth, elects to sue for the whole amount owing, he thereby confirms absolute title in the purchaser. It seems to me that it must follow as an inevitable conclusion that it was the duty of the seller to facilitate the transfer of title to the purchaser or his successor in interest. Instead, by what seems to me a fraudulent concealment of its election, it got possession of the car. That possession could not have been other than wrongful.

After demand made by these plaintiffs, the defendant caused a writ of attachment to be issued in its action above mentioned and turned the car over to the sheriff to be held by him under the writ.

I think the facts in this case are clearly distinguishable from those upon which the case of Samuels v. Barnet, 79 Cal. App. 529, 250 P. 405, was decided. In that case the legal owner, seller under the contract, never had possession of the car, nor did Samuels, the purchaser's assignee. The car was stored in a garage by the purchaser, who gave plaintiff an order for it. Plaintiff did not take physical possession of the car, or make any attempt to have the legal title in himself, as required by the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act. In this state of affairs, the plaintiff in an action to recover the purchase price of the car caused an attachment to be levied upon it, and it was sold to the defendant Barnet under execution sale. The court held that the sale to the plaintiff Samuels was constructively fraudulent under the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code, and, I think, rightly so held.

Here the defendant, holding evidence of legal title, by its own act divested itself of any rightful title, obtained possession of the car fraudulently and refuses the demand of plaintiffs who have succeeded to the equitable title and who can only obtain possession or record title by the act, voluntary or enforced, of the defendant. It seems to me that the position of defendant is wholly without merit either in law or good morals.

HILL v. NEW AMSTERDAM CASUALTY CO.★

Civ. 86.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 9, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 29, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 5, 1930.

1. Sheriffs and constables ☞166 — Sheriff's action against deputy's surety — Suing in individual capacity.

Sheriff's action against surety, for undersheriff's defalcation which sheriff made good, was properly brought in sheriff's individual and not official capacity.

2. Parties ☞95(6) — Suing "as" sheriff — Change of title — Effect.

If sheriff's action against surety on undersheriff's bond had been brought "as" sheriff, change in title, omitting official designation, would have been change in cause of action.

In the title of the action as originally filed, plaintiff was named as "R. L. H., Sheriff," the official designation being omitted in amended complaints. It was contended that the change in title was in effect a change in the original cause of action.

3. Parties ☞95(6) — Describing plaintiff as "sheriff" — Surplusage.

Clause designating plaintiff as "sheriff," in action against surety on undersheriff's bond, was surplusage and hence irrelevant to his relation to cause of action alleged.

4. Sheriffs and constables ☞19 — Statutory bond — Mandatory.

Statute requiring execution of surety bond by undersheriff is mandatory (Pol. Code, §§ 954, 996).

Pol. Code, § 954, and related sections, require that principal execute bond with surety, take oath of office within certain time, and file bond approved by judge of superior court, penalty for noncompliance being, by section 996, that office becomes vacant.

5. Sheriffs and constables §19 — Undersheriff's failure to sign bond — Surety's liability.

Surety on undersheriff's bond, not signed by principal nor approved by judge or recorded, was nevertheless liable to sheriff for undersheriff's defalcation (Pol. Code, §§ 954, 996).

6. Principal and surety §20 — Several obligation — Principal's failure to sign — Surety's liability.

Since several obligations bind each party, principal's failure to execute joint and several bond executed by surety did not exempt surety from liability.

STROTHER, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff was sheriff of the county of Tulare, and in January, 1923, appointed Charles R. Hurst as a deputy acting as undersheriff, and required him to give a bond for the faithful performance of his duties. A bond reciting that, "We, Charles R. Hurst, as principal, and New Amsterdam Casualty Company," etc., "as surety, are held and firmly bound," in the sum of $1,000, was executed by the defendant, and delivered by Hurst to the plaintiff without execution by him as principal. The bond was not approved by a judge of the superior court, or recorded.

Hurst misappropriated moneys coming into his hands as undersheriff, and this action was brought to enforce the obligation of defendant as his surety. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals.

[1] In the title of the action as originally filed plaintiff was named as "R. L. Hill, Sheriff of Tulare County," the designation being dropped in the amended complaints. As the gravamen of the action stated in the original complaint, and all of the amended complaints, was a defalcation of the deputy which was made good by the plaintiff, the action was properly in plaintiff's individual, and not his official, capacity.

[2, 3] It is objected by appellant that the change in title of the action was, in effect, a change in the cause of action as set up in the original complaint. This would have been true if the action had been begun by plaintiff, "as Sheriff of Tulare County." It is, however, too well settled to admit of argument, by unvarying decision, that clauses such as appear in the title of the original complaint are mere descriptions of the person and surplusage, not pertinent to the relation of the party to the cause of action stated.

[4] The second objection made by appellant to the third amended complaint is that appellant's principal did not comply with the mandatory provision of section 954 of the Political Code that he should execute the bond. This contention is based upon two theories: One, that as the statute requires the principal to execute the bond, it is void for want of his executing it; the other, that having failed to comply with the statutory mandate, the office became by that fact vacant and no liability attached to the surety.

These positions are so nearly related that they will be considered together.

It is true that the statutory provision is mandatory as to the principal, as are the provisions of cognate sections cited by appellant, requiring the principal to take the oath of office within a certain time, that the bond shall be approved by a judge of the superior court, and be filed within a fixed period with a designated officer.

[5] All of these provisions are mandatory upon the principal and a very definite penalty for failure to comply with them, or any of them, is fixed by section 996 of the Political Code, i. e., that the "office becomes vacant." There is no provision, however, that the acts of the principal while serving in the official capacity are void, or that he or his sureties are not liable for any wrongful act of his done in the official capacity.

"If he assumed the office * * * he was an officer de facto, 'and held a vested right to act as such until his right was questioned by some one in a proper proceeding for that purpose.' Hull v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 174, 177; People v. Toal, 85 Cal. 333, 338, 24 P. 603." People v. Hammond, 109 Cal. 384, 390, 42 P. 36, 37.

"Being an officer de facto, he and his sureties are estopped from denying that the bond was legally given; or rather that, so far as the officer and his sureties are concerned, he is to be held an officer de jure." People v. Hammond, supra, quoting from State v. Rhoades, 6 Nev. 352.

The cases cited by appellant to the effect that the office becomes vacant eo instante upon the failure of the officer to qualify as required by law have no application to the question before us. They are all directed, either to the question of the right of the officer to draw his salary, as in Norton v. Lewis, 34 Cal. App. 621, 168 P. 388, or the right of the appointing power to fill the vacancy or to some other matter wholly unrelated to the issue here.

[6] The decision in the case of People v. Hartley, 21 Cal. 585, 82 Am. Dec. 758, that the sureties on the bond under consideration in that case were not liable because the principal had not signed, was solely on the ground that the bond was joint in form, implying that the sureties agreed to become liable upon the condition that their principal should join with them in the obligation. The consideration was quite apart from any statutory requirement, and one applicable to all obligations, whether official or private. The bond sued on here is both joint and several. In a several obligation each party agrees to be bound whether any other joins with him in the obligation or not.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

FIRST NAT. BANK IN FRESNO v.
CORCORAN. ★

Civ. 279.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

April 7, 1930.

Rehearing Denied April 30, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 5, 1930.

1. Bills and notes ⇨356 — Holder — Bank — Check — Receipt for deposit.

Bank in which payee deposited checks and which paid out proceeds on payee's order was holder in due course, though deposit slip reserved right to charge them back to depositor if not paid (Civ. Code, §§ 3082, 3133).

The checks were negotiable instruments under Civ. Code, § 3082, and were regular on their face, were not overdue, and had not been previously dishonored, and the bank had no notice of any infirmity or defect in payee's title, and therefore would, under section 3133, be a holder in due course unless deprived of that status by provisions of the deposit slip. While under these provisions the bank assumed no responsibility for failure of its collecting agents and reserved right to charge checks back to depositor if not paid, it did not elect to exercise that right. Payment of the check was refused by the drawee bank, and thereupon the holder bank attempted to collect from the drawer.

2. Bills and notes ⇨431 — Liability on checks — Acceptance of note.

Bank's acceptance of payee's note in amount of dishonored checks deposited by payee did not alone extinguish drawer's liability to bank (Civ. Code, § 1531).

Under Civ. Code, § 1531, a new obligation is not substituted for an old one unless there is an existing intent in the minds of the parties to extinguish the old obligation. There was no evidence of any intent on the part of the bank to accept the note in discharge or satisfaction of the checks, but the bank retained the checks and persisted in its attempt to collect them from the drawer, and at the time of this suit on the checks, no part of the principal of the note had been paid.

3. Payment ⇨16(1) — Taking note.

Taking note does not constitute payment of debt, in absence of agreement (Civ. Code, § 1531).

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank in Fresno against J. E. Corcoran. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Cosgrave & Barstow, of Fresno, for appellant.

Theodore M. Stuart, of Fresno, for respondent.

MARKS, Acting P. J.

Appellant filed two actions in the court below to recover judgments on two checks. One was dated August 15, 1927, drawn by respondent, by O. C. Woodworth, his agent, upon the Franklin Trust & Savings Company of Pittsburgh, Pa., a banking corporation, to E. Y. Foley, in the sum of $2,179.80. The other check was identical in form, except that it was dated August 16, 1927, and was drawn for the sum of $1,500. The two cases were tried together, and, while there are two judgments from which appeals were taken, they are presented here upon a single record. As the facts, except as we have noted, are identical, we will consider the two cases together.

Appellant was a banking corporation with its principal place of business in the city of Fresno, Cal. Respondent was a resident of Pittsburgh, Pa., where he was engaged in the wholesale fruit and produce business. E. Y. Foley was a resident of Fresno, Cal., where he was engaged in the business of buying grapes and other fruits and shipping them to the Eastern market. During the summer and fall of 1927 Foley and respondent were engaged in the business of buying and shipping grapes to the Eastern market upon a "joint account." Respondent furnished the money to carry on the operations, and the two were to divide the profits or losses between themselves. O. C. Woodworth was respondent's agent in Fresno, who drew the checks in question, as well as others, to furnish Foley the money with which to purchase grapes from the growers. Respondent testified that the checks so drawn by Woodworth had to be "O. K.'d" by respondent in Pittsburgh before the bank there would pay them. The checks had nothing on them to indicate this requisite, and respondent further testified that the bank in Pittsburgh was not informed of it, so we can give no weight to this statement.

The two checks in question were in the usual form of bank checks. On the face of each were letters and figures which were shown to refer to the numbers of refrigerator cars used by railroads in transporting fresh fruit to the market. Woodworth gave the checks to Foley on their respective dates, and on these dates he (Foley), after indorsing them, deposited them to his personal checking account in the appellant bank. Appellant credited the amounts of the checks to Foley's account, and he checked against this balance, reducing the amount of his deposit to about $30 within three days. In the due course of business, appellant sent the checks to the Pittsburgh bank, where they were presented for payment, which was refused, payment having been stopped by respondent. They have not been paid. The slips used by Foley in depositing the checks in his account had printed upon them the following: "In receiving checks on deposit, this bank assumes no responsibility for the failure of any of its direct or indirect collecting agents, and shall only be held liable when proceeds in actual funds or solvent credits shall have come into its possession. Under these conditions items previously credited may be charged back to the depositor's account. In making this deposit the depositor hereby assents to the foregoing conditions." On September 1, 1927, appellant received notice that the checks had not been paid, and immediately notified Foley of this fact. It made numerous efforts to collect from respondent. These checks were never out of the possession of appellant, or its correspondent banks, or its attorneys.

In November, 1927, Foley changed his account in the appellant bank from E. Y. Foley to the Foley Packing Company. On November 22, 1927, Foley, with Ben H. Arkelian and R. George as comakers, gave appellant their promissory note in the exact amount of the principal sum of the two checks. While interest payments were made on this note, no part of the principal has been paid. On the date of the note, the checks were charged up to the account of the Foley Packing Company, and on the next day the Foley Packing Company was credited with the amount of the note. The cashier of the bank testified that delay of a day in the entry of the credit of the principal of the note was due to the time necessary for the record of the deposit to pass through the regular machinery of the bank, and that the two entries resulted from the one transaction. He also testified that the debit and credit entries were made as a matter of bookkeeping for the convenience of the bank. Nowhere in the record before us is there any evidence that would raise the slightest intimation of an agreement between the makers of the note, or any of them, and appellant, or between respondent, or the makers of the note and the bank, or any of them, that the note was given in payment of the checks. On the other hand, appellant retained the checks, and was persistent in its attempts to collect them from respondent.

The trial court found that the appellant was not the holder of the checks in due course, and for value, and that it had merely accepted the checks for collection, basing this finding on the printed portion of the deposit slips before quoted. It also found that the promissory note given by Foley, Arkelian, and George was past due, and "that upon the delivery of said note to the plaintiff the plaintiff immediately entered the same as a deposit to the credit of the account of E. Y. Foley with plaintiff with the same force and effect as though Foley had deposited that amount of cash, and plaintiff thereupon charged against said account the amount of said check and said interest with the same force and effect as though plaintiff had cashed a check drawn by Foley against said account. That plaintiff by its own voluntary conduct in handling said transaction with Foley and his comakers on said note, substituted said note for said check as items in Foley's account and thereupon title to and right of possession of said check passed to Foley." Upon these findings the trial court gave judgment for respondent. Appellant maintains that the findings are not supported by the evidence and are contrary to the evidence.

[1] That the checks in question are negotiable instruments cannot be disputed. They were in writing, signed by the maker, contained an unconditional order to pay certain sums of money, were payable on demand, were payable to the order of Foley, and were drawn on the Pittsburgh bank, Section 3082, Civ. Code. Neither can it be questioned that appellant was the holder of the checks in due course. They were regular on their face, they were not overdue, and had not been previously dishonored. It had no notice of any infirmity in the instruments or defect in the title of Foley to them. It took them in good faith and for value. Section 3133, Civ. Code. The only ground urged by respondent to uphold the findings of the court that the checks were not taken by appellant in good faith and for value is the printed portion of the deposit slip which we have quoted. On August 16 and 17, 1927, the dates of the deposits of the two checks in question, Foley deposited about $22,000 with appellant. By August 19, 1927, he had checked out all of this money except about $30. Appellant paid this money out upon Foley's written order, which is as effective, as far as consideration is concerned, as though the money were paid to him in cash. The printed portion of the deposit slip reserved the right to appellant to receive the checks for collection only, and to charge them back to the depositor in case they were not paid. This was a right which appellant might or might not exercise as it chose. In this case it did not choose to charge them back to Foley, but attempted to collect them from respondent as it had the right to do.

[2, 3] Respondent maintains, in effect, that, when Foley gave his note to the bank, the liability of respondent to appellant was satisfied and discharged. The situation in which the parties were placed by giving this note was similar to the one discussed in the case of London & San Francisco Bank v. Parrott, 125 Cal. 472, 58 P. 164, 73 Am. St. Rep. 64. It is well settled that a new obligation is not substituted for an old one unless there is an existing intent in the minds of the parties so to do. Section 1531, Civ. Code.

As we have observed before, there is not only no evidence, but not even an intimation of evidence in the record, tending to show any intent or agreement to substitute the obligation of the note for the checks. In the case of Clark v. Berlin Realty Co., 33 Cal. App. 50, 164 P. 333, 335, the following was said:

"The main contention, however, and that which forms the substance of the defense interposed by the defendant, is that all of the indebtedness incurred by the Laundry Company to the bank and as evidenced by the several promissory notes was extinguished when the note for $14,500 was given on March 5, 1913, which was after the defendant had ceased to be one of the stockholders in the Laundry Company. It appeared in evidence that, at the time the note for $14,500 was made, the notes previously taken were delivered to the Laundry Company and marked

'paid.' The defendant urged and now insists that, under the facts shown by the evidence, when the last note was made a novation was effected, and under the agreement of the parties the new obligation extinguished the old debt. It has been held numerous times and by the decisions of this state that the taking of a promissory note from a debtor, or of a third party, will not extinguish the debt and create a new obligation, unless received by the creditor under an express agreement that it shall have that effect. It is further asserted in the authorities that there is not a presumption in favor of a note being received as payment under such circumstances; and, where a note was given to take up another note, it was said that because the original note was surrendered and marked paid on its face 'was not conclusive evidence of the extinguishment of the debt.' In the case of Bonestell v. Bowie, 128 Cal. 511, 61 P. 78, the text of the decision supports these statements, and a number of cases are therein collected and cited which are all to the same general point and effect. See, also, Gnarini v. Swiss American Bank, etc., 162 Cal. 181, 121 P. 726. In London & San Francisco Bank v. Parrott, 125 Cal. 472, 73 Am. St. Rep. 64, 58 P. 164, the court said: 'In the absence of an agreement to that effect, or evidence that such was the intention of the parties, the taking of a note for an existing liability does not constitute a payment of the debt.'"

The cases of Gnarini v. Banca Svizzera Americana, 39 Cal. App. 200, 178 P. 532; Sonoma County National Bank v. Skinner, 42 Cal. App. 202, 183 P. 464; Spellacy v. Young, 44 Cal. App. 174, 186 P. 368, and Seaboard National Bank v. Belden, 47 Cal. App. 558, 190 P. 1045, support this doctrine. It is so well settled that further citation of authorities is unnecessary. The findings of fact which we have noted are not supported by the evidence.

Both judgments are reversed.
